

THE UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA LIBRARY

THE WILMER COLLECTION OF CIVIL WAR NOVELS PRESENTED BY RICHARD H. WILMER, JR.

-

SAN THE THE

MISTRESS AND MAID.

A Household Story.

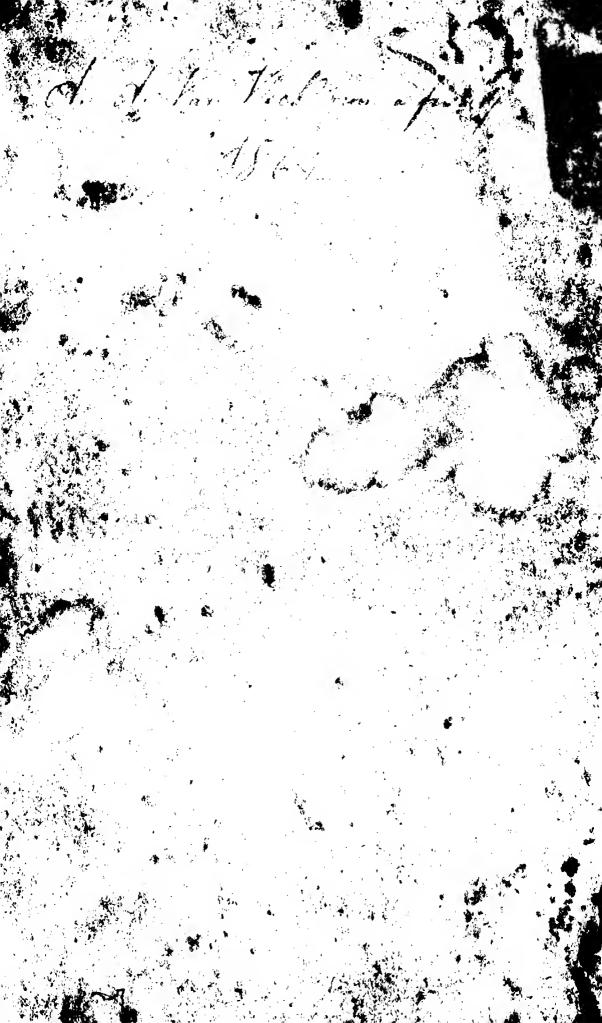

MISSIMULOCH,

"John Halifax, Gentleman;" "The Ogilvies;"
"Head of the Family;" "Nothing New;"
"Agatha's Husband," &c., &c., &c.

RICHMOND:

WEST & JOHNSTON. 145 Mam Street.

1864.

MISTRESS AND MAID.

A Konsehold Story.

BY MISS MULOCH,

AUTHOR OF

"JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN," "OLIVE," "THE OGILVIES,"

"THE HEAD OF THE FAMILY," "NOTHING NEW,"

"AGATHA'S HUSBAND," &c., &c.

WEST & JOHNSTON, PUBLISHERS.

Printed at the Lynchburg "Virginian" Book and Job Office.

1, 7 . : : , T: 5 e e

•

1 - 3 7 6 h.

P

MISTRESS AND MAID.

CHAPTER I.

must confess, when they saw the damsel, the themselves! ladies felt a certain twinge of doubt as to young, bright, and active as she was, could by abeth enter the kitchen of the Misses Lenf. no possibility do every thing that wasto be done The ladies were all there. Johanna arranin the little establishment: be, for instance, in ging the table for their early tea: Selina lying three places at once—in the school-room on the sofa trying to cut bread and butter: teaching little boys and girls, in the kitchen Hilary on her knees before the fire, making cooking dinner, and in the rooms up stairs the bit of toast, her eldest sister's one luxury. busy at house-maid's work. Besides, much of her time was spent in waiting upon "poor ses presented to Elizabeth's eyes; which. Selina," who frequently was, or fancied her though they seemed to notice nothing, must, self, too ill to take any part in either the schoo' in reality, have noticed every thing. or house duties.

—and done without a servant still.

Though, the thing being inevitable, she said little about it, Miss Leaf's heart was often sore to see Hilary's pretty hands smear ed with blacking of grates, and roughened with scouring of floors. To herself this sort of thing had become natural—but Hilary!

All the time of Hilary's childhood, the youngest of the family had, of course, been spared all house-work; and atterward her for she was of a shy nature, and had been so clever girl, with a genuine love of knowledge: the housel old, that she felt quite awkward in Latin, Greek, and even the higher branches the character of mistress. Instinctively she of arithmetic and mathematics, were not be hid her poor hands, that would at once have yond her range; and this she found much betrayed her to the tharp eyes of the workingmore interesting than washing dishes or sweep woman, and then, ashamed of her momentary ing floors. True, she always did whatever do false pride, laid them outside her apron and was not in the household line. She had only "Will you take a chair, Mrs. Hand? My lately learned to "see dust," to make a pud-sister told you, I believe, all our requirements

'ding, to iron a shirt; and, moreover, to reflect. as she woke up to the knowedge of how these SHE was a rather tall, awkward, and strong-things should be done, and how necessary they ly-built girl of about fifteen. This was the first were, what must have been her eldest sister's impression the "maid" gave to her "mistres- lot during all these twenty years! What pains: ses," the Misses Leaf, when she entered their what wearmess, what eternal toil must Johankitchen, accompanied by her mother, a widow na have silently endured in order to do all and washer-woman, by name Mrs. Hand. 1 those things which till now had seemed to $d\phi$

Therefore, after much cogitation as to the whether they had not been rash in offering to best and most prudent way to amend matter-. take her; whether it would not have been wiser and perceiving with her clear common sense to have gone on in their old way—now, alas that, willing as she might be to work in the grown into a very old way, so as almost to kitchen, her own time would be much more make them forget they had ever had any other valuably spent in teaching their growing school, and done without a servant still.

Many consultations had the three sisters first started the bold idea, "We must have a held before such a revolutionary extravagance servant;" and therefore, it being necessary to was determined on. But Miss Leaf was be begin with a very small servant on very low ginning both to look and to feel "not so young wages, (£3 per annum was, I fear the maxias she had been;" Miss Selina ditto: though, mum), did they take this Elizabeth Hand. being still under forty, she would not have acknowledged it for the world. And Miss Hilary. eyed. and rather sad-voiced woman, did Eliz-

This was the picture that her three mistres-

"I've brought my daughter, ma'am, as you sent word you'd take on trial," said Mrs. Hand, addressing herself to Selina, who, as the tallest, the best dressed, and the most in posing, was usually regarded by strangers as the head of the family.

"Oh, Joanna, my dear."

Miss Leaf came forward, rather uncertainly, studies had left no time for it. For she was a long accustomed to do the servant's work of glad for her to learn, ma'am," replied the parting between mother and daughter; they mother, her sharp and rather free tone subdued meither kissed nor shook hands, which undein spite of herself by the gentle voice of Miss monstrative farewell somewhat surprised Hil-Leaf. Of course, living in the same country ary. town, she knew all about the three school-mis- Now, Miss Hilary Leaf had all this, while tresses, and how till now they had kept no gone on toasting. Luckity for her bread the servant. "It's her first place, and her'll be fire was low and black; meantime, from beawk'ard at first, most like. Hold up your hind fer long drooping curls (which Johanna head, Lizabeth.

We only want a good, intelligent girl. We are in g only, "Good-by, Lizabeth," with a nod, willing to teach her every thing."

"Is her name Elizabeth?"

from the sofa. ""Call her Betty."

Lizabeth. It wor my young missis's name in ception of character than either of her sisters. my first place, and I never had a second."

"We will can ner raizage in Leaf, with the gentle decision she could use dissatisfied.

"Now, girl, take off your bonnet," said Section of the said should appealed.

on oceasion.

There was a little more discussion between line, to whom Johanna had silently appealed the mother and the future mistress as to hol-jin her perplexity as to the next proceeding idays. Sundays, and so on, during which time with regard to the new member of the housethe new servant stood silent and impassive in hold.

the kitchen, or, as it is called in those regions, awkward, and wretched to the last degree, at the house-place.

As before said, Elizabeth was by no means a personable girl, and her clothes did not set things?" said Hilary, speaking for the first her off to advantage. Her cotton frock hung time: and at the new voice, so quick, cheerful, in straight lines down to her ankles, displaying and pleasant, Elizabeth visibly started. her clumsily shod feet and woolen stockings: Miss Hilary rose from her knees, crossed above it was a pinufore—a regular child's pin- the kitchen, took from the girl's unresisting afore, of the cheap, strong, blue-speckled print hands the old black bonnet and shawl, and which in those days was generally worn. A lit- hung them up carefully on a nail behind the tle shabby shawl, pinned at the throat, and pin-great eight-day clock. It was a simple action, ned very carelessly and crookedly with an old-day quite without intention, and accepted withblack bonnet, niuch too small for her large out seknowledgment, except one quick glance head and her quantities of ill kem bain, com-on that keen, yet soft grey eye; but years and pleted the costume. It did no impress tavor-years after Elizabeth reminded Hilary of it. ably a lady who, being, or rather having been, the And now Elizabeth stood forth in her own very handsome herself, was as much alive to proper likeness, unconcealed by bonnet or appearances as the second Miss Lead vations, and insisted strongly that the new ser-arms: that tremendous head of rough, dusky vant shoul? only be taken "on trial," with hair was evidently for the first time gathered no obligation to keep her a lay longer than into a comb. Thence elf-locks escaped in all they wished. Her feeling on the inatter com-directions, and were forever being pushed benegotiation with Mrs. Hand, by saying.

events.''

"Which is all I can at for, Miss Leaf, underiably plain. Her figure, so far as the Her bean't much to look at, but her's willin' pinafore exhibited it, was undeveloped and and sharp, and her's never told me a lie in lungainly, the chest being contracted and the her life. Courtesy to the missis and say shoulders rounded, as if with carrying childthee'lt do thy best. Lizal eth." ren or other weights while still a growing girl.

she never offered to spenk. And Miss Leaf, rently united in dealing unkindly with Elizas. feeling that for all parties the interview had both Hand.

better be shortened, rose from her chair. Mrs. Hand took the hint and departed, say- with her?

half-encouraging, half-admonitory, which Eli-"Thank you, kindly: and I be willing and zabeth silently returned. That was all the would not let her "turn up," though she was twenty), she was making her observations on "Far too long and too time," observed relina the new servant. It might be that, possessing more head than the one and more heart than "Any thing you please, Miss; but I call her the other, Hilary was gifted with deeper perbut certainly her expression, as she watched "We will call her Elizabeth." said Miss Elizabeth, was rather amused and kindly than the door-way between the back kitchen and Elizabeth obeyed, and then stood, irresolute. the furthest end of the house-place.

"Shall I show you where to hang up your shawl or maternal protection. The pinafore

She made several rather depreciatory obser-scarcely covered her gaunt neck and long municated itself to Johanna, who closed the hind her ears, or rubbed (not smoothed: there was nothing smooth about her) back from her

Well, let us hope your daughter will suit forehead, which, Hilary noticed, was low, We will give her a fair chance at all broad, and full. The rest of her face, except the before-mentioned eyes was absolutely and f ren or other weights while still a growing girl Pulled Sorward Flizal eth did concess, but In fact, nature and circumstances had appa

Still here she was; and what was to be done

which was apparently all her luggage, to the the staircase is quite open, and though I am little room-formerly a box-closet-where she sure she has an honest look and not that of a was to sleep, the Misses Leaf-or as facetious listener, still Elizabeth might hear. Shall I neighbors called them, the Miss Leaves—call her down stairs, and tell her to light a took serious counsel together over their tea. | fire in the parlor?"

were always in the habit of taking that meal, forebodings to the contrary, the small maiden and indeed every other, in the kitchen. It did it quickly and well, especially after a hint saved time, trouble, and fire, besides leaving or two from Hilary-let me take the opportuthe parlor always tidy for callers, chiefly pu-nity of making a little picture of this same Hilpils' parents, and preventing these latter from ary. discovering that the three orphan daughters Little it should be, for she was a decidedly and dine without meat. Now this system in brief, one of those people who are best de would not do any longer.

regularly of evenings?"

my part. I couldn't eat, or sew, or do any thing cence of spirit, meant to "cheer but not incwith that great hulking girl sitting staring briate" a household. opposite, or standing; for how could we ask her to sit with us? Already, what must she displayed. No centre of a brilliant, admiring have thought of us—people who take tea in the kitchen?'

"I do not think that matters," said the eldest sister, gently, after a moment's silence. "Every body in the town knows who and what we are, or might, if they chose to inquire. We cannot conceal our poverty if we tant of them, constituted the family. tried: and I don't think any body looks down upon us for it. Not even since we began to keep school, which you thought was such a terrible thing, Selina."

"And it was. I have never reconciled my-since her self to teaching the baker's two boys and the grocer's little giri. You were wrong, Johanna, you ought to have drawn the line somewhere, and it ought to have excluded tradespeople.'

"Beggars can not be choosers." began Hil-

"Beggars!" echoed Selina.

den storms that were often breaking out be ting. tween these two. "You know well we have never begged or borrowed from any body, and the night, when she lifted the hour-old baby hardly ever been indebted to any body, except out of its dead mother's bed into her own, it for the extra lessons that Mr. Lyon would became Johanna's one object in life. Through insist upon giving to Ascott at home."

ary, with a slight color rising in her face, sed, fed it; night and day it 'lay in her

Having sent her with the small burden, "I think, sisters, we are forgetting that

Tea itself suggested the first difficulty. They While she is doing it, and in spite of Selina's of Henry Leaf, Esq., solicitor, and sisters of little woman: small altogether, hands, feet, Henry Leaf, Junior, Esq., also solicitor, but and figure being in satisfactory proportion. whose sole mission in life seemed to have been Her movements, like those of most little woto spend every thing, make every body miser-men, were light and quick rather than ele-able, marry, and die, that these three ladies gant; yet every thing she did was done with a did always wait upon themselves at meal-time, neatness and delicacy which gave an involunand did sometimes breakfast without butter, tary sense of grace and harmony. She was scribed by the word "harmonions;" people "Besides, there is no need for it," said Hil- who never set your teeth on edge, or rub you "I am sure we can well up the wrong way, as very excellent people afford both to keep and to feed a servant. occasionally do. Yet she was not over-meek and to have a fire in the parlor every day, or unpleasantly amiable; there was a liveli-Why not take our meals there, and sit there ness and even briskness about her, as if the every day wine of her life had a spice of Cham-"We must," added Selma, decidedly. "For pagniness, not frothiness but natural efferves-

> And in her own household this gift was most circle could be more charming, more witty, more irresistibly amusing than was Hilary sitting by the kitchen fire, with the cat on her knee, between her two sisters, and the schoolboy Ascott Leaf, their nephew-which four individuals, the cat being not the least impor-

> In the family, Hilary shone supreme. recognized her as the light of the house, and so she had been, ever since she was born, ever > > "Dying mother mild, Said, with accents undefiled, 'Child, be mother to this child.'"

It was said to Johanna Leaf-who was not Mrs. Leaf's own child. But the good stepmother, who had once taken the little motherless girl to her bosom, and never since made "No, my dear, we were never that," said the slightest difference between her and her Miss Leaf, interposing against one of the snd. own children, knew well whom she was trus-

From that solemn hour, in the middle of a sickly infancy, for it was a child born Here Johanna suddenly stopped, and Hill amidst trouble, her sole hands washed, dresbosom, and was unto her as a daughter."

look forward to woman's natural destiny, a cleaning the stairs, and getting up to light the husband and children of her own. But years kitchen fire of winter mornings, as she will slipped by, and she was Miss Leafstill. What lo if we have not a servant to do it for her. matter! Hilary was her daughter.

Johanna's pride in her knew no bounds. Not that she showed it much; indeed she "But don't bother me, please. Domestic at-deemed it a sacred duty not to show it; but fairs are for women, not men." Ascott was to make believe her "child" was just like eighteen, and just about to pass out of his catother children. But she was not. Nobody ever thought she was-even in externals.-Fate gave her all those gifts which are some times sent to make up for the lack of worldly hope she won't be in my way. Don't let her prosperity. Her brown eyes were as soft as meddle with any of my books and things." loves' eyes, yet could dance with fun and mis chief if they chose; her hair, brown also, with a dark-red shade in it, crisped itself in two wavy lines over her forehead, and then tum bled down in two glorious masses, which Jo-standhanna, ignorant, alas! oi-art, called very combs, or to arrange in proper, regular curls knough inly quaking a little; for somehow. Her features—well, they too, were good a bet the merry, handsome, rather exacting ladter than those unartistic people had any idea had acquired considerable influence in this. of-better even than Selina's, who in her youth household of women. "You must put up had been the belle of the town. But whether with the loss of your den, Ascott; it would artistically correct or not. Johanna, though be a great shame if you did not, for the sake she would on no account have acknowledged of Aunt Johanna and the rest of us."
It. believed salemnly that there was not such "Um!" grumbled the boy, who, though he Poseibly a similar idea dawned upon the dislike to "putting up" with the slightest inapparently dull mind of Elizabeth Hand, for convenience. "Well, it won't last long. I she watched her youngest mistress intently, shall be off shortly. What a july life I" from kitchen to parler, and from parlor back have in London, Aunt Huary! The see Mr. to kitchen: and once when Miss Hilary stood Lyon there too."

giving information as to the proper abode of "Yes," said Aunt Hilary, briedy, reduces broom, bellows, etc., the little maid gazed atling to Dido and Eneas: humble and easy her with such admiring observation that the Latinity for a student of eighteen; but Ascott scuttle she carried was tilted, and the coals was not a brilliant boy, and, being apprenticed were strewn all over the kitchen floor. At early, his education had been much neglected, which catastrophe Miss Leaflooked miserable, till Mr. Lyon came as usher to the Stowbur; Miss Selina spoke crossly, and Ascott, who grammar-school, and happening to meet and just then came in to his tea, late as usual, burst take an interest in him, taught him and his into a shout of laughter a South Sea Islander. When she stood with we hardly know why: we love one another, her grim, stoild countenance, contemplating we still less know why. If on the day she the coals on, Aunt Hilary, how killing she first saw in church it was Mr. Lyon's grave.

It was as much as Hilary could do to help together, of evenings. bound him over to keep the peace toward the manity. new servant.

laugh broke out again.

etay?"

She was then just thirty; not too old to "I hope never again to see Aunt Johanna Don't you see, Ascott?"
"Oh, I see," answered the boy, carelessly, erpillar state as a doctor's apprentice-lad into the chrysalis condition of a medical student in London. "But," with sudder reflection, "I

"No; you need not be afraid. I have pur hem all into your room. I myself cleared your rubbish out of the box closet-

"The box-closet! Now, really, I can't

"She is to sleep in the box-closet: where else and labored in vain to quall under could she aleep?" said Hilary, resolutely.

a face in the whole world as little Hillary's. was not a had fellow at heart. had a boy's

Aunt Hilary Latin, Greek, and mathematics

aughing herself, she being too near her ne- I shall make no mysteries here. Human phew's own age always to maintain a dignified nature is human nature all the world overaunt-like attitude. but nevertheless, when, A tale without love in it would be unmuturate having disposed on her sisters in the parlor unreal-in fact, a simple lie: for there are no she coaxed Ascott into the school-room, and histories and no lives without love in them: insisted upon his Latin being done-she help- if there could be, Heaven pity and pardon ing him, Aunt Hilary scolded him well, and them, for they would be mere abortions of hu-

Thank Heaven, we, most of us, do not philip-"But she is such a queer one. Exactly like sophize; we only live. We like one another. heavy-browed, somewhat severe face—for he And the regular, rollicking, irresistible boy-lwas a Scotsman, and his sharp, strong Scotch features did look "hard" beside the soft, rosy "She will be great fun. Is she really to well-conditioned youth of Stowbury-if on that Sunday any one had told Hilary Leaf that "I hope so," said Hilary, trying to be grave, the face of this stranger was to be the one face soul with a vividness that no other impressions grand future—the future of a medical student. were strong enough to efface, and retained all expenses being paid by his godfather. Mr. there with a tenacity that no vicissitudes of Ascott, the merchant, of Russell Square, once time, or place, or fortunes had power to alter, a shop boy of Stowbury. Nor was it unnatu-Hilary would—yes, I think she would—have ral that all Ascott's anticipations of London quietly kept looking on. She would have accepted there lot, such as it was, with its shine the one fact that he would "see Mr. Lyon." and shade, its joy and its anguish; it came to But in telling thus much about her mistreather without her seeking, as most of the solemn ses, I have for the time being lost sight of Eithings in life do: and whatever it brought with zabeth Hand. it, it could have come from no other source. Left to herself, the girl stood for a minute than that from which all high, and holy, and or two looking around her in a confused manpure loves ever must come—the will and per-ner, then, rousing her faculties, began mechan-had never had either brother or sister.

unission of God.

Seeing how clever Miss Hilary was, and how whole heart. Over this simple fact let no more be now palace.

What Hilary felt none knew. But the was beautiful to whip tops upon! very girlish in some things; and her life was cott, condoling together over the new servant.

of her life, stamped upon brain and heart, and vague listening, as the lad began talking of his ically to obey the order with which her mis-Mr. Lyon himself requires no long descrip-tress had quitted the kitchen, and to wash up In his first visit he had told Miss Leaf the tea-things. She did at in a fashion that, all about himself that there was to be known; if seen, would have made Miss Leaf thankful that he was, as they were, a poor teacher, who that the ware was only the common set, and had altogether "made himself," as so many not the cherished china belonging to former Scotch students do. His father, whom he days: still she did it, noisily it is true, but scarcely remembered, had been a small Ayractively, as if her heart were in her work. shire farmer; his mother was dead, and he Then she took a candle and peered about her new domains.

These were small enough, at least they much as a schoolmistress she would need all would have seemed so to other eyes than Elithe education she could get, he had offered to zabeth's: for, until the school-room and boxteach her along with her nephew; and she closet above had been kindly added by the and Johanna were only too thankful for the landlord, who would have done any thing to advantage. But during the teaching he had show his respect for the Misses Leaf, it had also taught her another thing, which neither been 'merely a six-roomed cottage—parlor had contemplated at the time-to respect him kitchen, back kitchen, and three upper chamwith her whole soul, and to love him with her bers. It was a very cozy house notwithstanding, and it seemed to Elizabeth's eyes a perfect said. Hilary said nothing. She recognized For several minutes more she stood and it herself as soon as he was gone; a plain, sad, contemplated her kitchen, with the fire shining solemn truth, which there was no deceiving on the round oaken stand in the centre, and herself did not exist, even had she wished its the large wooden-bottomed chairs, and the non-existence. Perhaps Johanna also found loud-ticking clock, with its tall case, the inside it out, in her darling's extreme paleness and of which, with its pendulum and weights, had unusual quietness for a while; but she too said been a perpetual mystery and delight, first to nothing. Mr. Lyon wrote regularly to Ascott, Hilary's and then to Ascott's childhood. Then and once or twice to her, Miss Leaf; but there was the sofa, large and ugly, but, oh! so though every one knew that Hilary was his comfortable, with its faded, thoweved chintz. particular friend in the whole family, he did washed and worn for certainly twenty years. not write to Hilary. He had departed rather And, over all, Elizabeth's keen observation was suddenly, on account of some plan which he attracted by a queer machine apparently made said, affected his future very considerably; but of thin rope and bits of wood, which hung up which, though he was in the habit of telling to the hooks on the ceiling—an old-fashioned them his affairs, he did not further explain baby's swing. Finally, her eye dwelt with Still Johanna knew he was a good man, and content on the blue and red diamond files though no man could be quite good enough floor, so easily swept and mopped, and (only for her darling. the liked him. the trusted Elizabeth did not think of that, for her hard childhood had been all work and no play) so Hilary and As-all before her, full of infinite hope. By-and-congratulated themselves that their delight in by her color returned, and her merry voice and this occupation had somewhat faded, though it laugh were heard about the house just as was really not so many years ago since one of the former's pupils, coming suddenly out of This being the position of affairs, it was not the school-room, had caught her in the act of surprising that after Ascott's last speech Hil- whipping a meditative top round this same ary's mind wandered from Dido and Æneas to kitchen floor.

Meantime Elizabeth penetrated farther, investigating the back kitchen, with its various conveniences; especially the pantry, everyladded Johanna. shelf of which was so neatly arranged and beautifully clean. Apparently this neatness then picked up first the servant, then the canimpressed the girl with a sense of novelty and dle, and then the fragments of crockery. curiosity; and though she could hardly be said "Why, it's my ewer, my favorite ewer, and to meditate—her mind was not sufficiently it's all smashed to bits, and I never can match awakened for that—still, as she stood at the it again. You careless, clumsy, good-for-nokitchen fire, a slight thoughtfulness deepened thing creature!" the expression of her face, and made it less dull and heavy than it had at first appeared. ter.

"I wonder which on 'em does it all. They must work pretty hard, I reckon; and two o'tress, I suppose; why don't you speak to your them's such little uns."

She stood a while longer; for sitting down, appeared to be to Elizabeth as new a proceed-satisfied herself that no bodily injury had been ing as thinking; then she went up stairs, still sustained by Elizabeth, and then asked her literally obeying orders, to shut windows and how this disaster had happened? For a serious pull down blinds at nightfall. The bedrooms lisaster she felt it was. Not only was the were small, and insufficiently, nay, shabbily present loss annoying, but a servant with a furnished; but the floors were spotless—ah! talent for crockery breaking would be a far too poor Johanna!-and the sheets, though patch- expensive luxury for them to think of retained and darned to the last extremity, were white ing. And she had been listening in the soliand whole. Nothing was dirty, nothing unti-tude of the parlor to a long lecture from her poverty—for whatever novelists may say, pov-doubts Selina had about Elizabeth's "suiterty can not be picturesque; but all things ingwere decent and in order. The house, poor as it was, gave the impression of belonging to "tell me the plain truth. How was it?" "real ladies;" ladies who thought no manner "It was the cat," sobbed Elizabeth. of work beneath them, and who, whatever "What a barefaced falsehood!" exclaimed they had to do, took the pains to do it as well Selina. "You wicked girl, how could it posas possible.

Mrs. Hand's roughly-brought-up daughter|telling a lie, and that lies are hateful, and that had never been in such a house before, and all liars go to-" her examination of every new corner of it "Nonsense, hush!" interrupted Hilary, seemed quite a revelation. Her own little rather sharply; for Selina's "tongue," the terror sleeping nook was fully astidy and comfortable of her childhood, now merely annoyed her. as the rest, which fact was not lost upon Eliza-Selina's temper was a long understood houseand intelligence—the only thing which beau-that her bark was worse than her bite—but it tified her rugged face—came into the girl's was provoking that she should exhibit herself and rather coarse, but neatly sewed.

Which of her mistresses the "her" referred downright passion, and unlimited abuse fells to remained unspecified; but Elizabeth, spur-upon the victim's devoted head, Elizabeth's red to action by some new idea, went briskly manner changed. After one dogged repetition back into the bedrooms, and looked about to of, "It was the cat!" not another word could see if there was any thing she could find to be got out of her. She stood, her eyes fixed do. At last, with a sudden inspiration, she on the kitchen floor, her brows knitted, and peered into a wash-stand, and found there an her under hp pushed out—the very picture of empty ewer. Taking it in one hand and the sullenness. Young as she was, Elizabeth evicandle in the other, she ran down stairs.

from sleep on the kitchen hearth, at the same that some people are born with, as others instant ran wildly up stairs: there was a start with hare-lip or club-foot; only, unlike these, -a stumble-and then down came the candle, it may be conquered, though the battle is long the ewer, Elizabeth, and all.

It was an awful crash. It brought every member of the family to see what was the Elizabeth Hand. Her appearance, as she matter.

"What has the girl broken?" cried Selina. "Where has she hurt herself?" anxiously Hilary said nothing, but ran for a light, and

"Please, Selma," whispered her eldest sis-

"Very well, Johanna. You are the misservant?"

Miss Leaf, in an humbled, alarmed way, first There was no attempt at picturesque always dissatisfied younger sister, on the great

"Come, now," seeing the girl hesitated, sibly be the cat? Do you know that you are

That bright look of mingled softness; hold fact—they did not much mind it, knowing eyes as she "turned down" the truckle-bed, so soon before the new servant.

and felt the warm blankets and sheets, new . The latter first looked up at the lady with simple surprise; then, as in spite of the other "Her's made 'em hersel', I reckon. La!" two, Miss Selina worked herself up into a dently had, like her unfortunate mistress, "a Fatal activity! Hilary's pet cat, standed temper of her own' - a spiritual deformity > and sore, sometimes ending only with life. It had plainly never confinenced with poor stood under the flood of sharp words poured out upon her, was absolutely repulsive. Even own rough home she was used to see brothers Miss Hilary turned away; and began to think and sisters quarrelling, and mothers boxing it would have been easier to teach all day and their childrens' ears, can not be known; do house-work half the night, than have the whether she was or was not surprised to see infliction of a servant-to say nothing of the the same proceedings among ladies and gendisgrace of seeing Selina's "peculiarities" so tlemen, she never betrayed, but certain it is exposed before a stranger.

impracticable. The only chance was to let her "black" looks vanished gradually, as soon Selina expend her wrath and retire, and then as Miss Selina left the kitchen. to take some quiet opportunity of explaining | On the reappearance of Miss Hilary it had to Elizabeth that sharp language was only quite gone. But Hilary took no notice of "her way," and must be put up with. Hu-her; she was in search of Johanna, who, shamiliating as this was, and fatal to domestic king and cold with agitation, came slowly authority that the first thing to be taught a down stairs. new servant was to "put up" with one of her "Is she gone to bed ?" mistresses, still there was no alternative .- "Yes, my dear. It was the best thing for Hilary had already foreboded and made up her: she is not at all well to day." her mind to such a possibility, but she had Hilary's lip curled a little, but she replied hoped it would not occur the very first even-not a word. She had not the patience with even than she anticipated. Whether, irritated arm chair, shut the door, came and sat beside by the intense sullenness of the girl. Selina's her, and took her hand. temper was worse than usual, or whether, as is Johanna pressed it, shed a quiet tear or always the case with people like her, something two, and wiped them away. Then the two else had vexed her, and she vented it upon the sisters remained silent, with hearts sad and first cause of annoyance that occurred, certain it sore. is that her tongue went on unchecked till it with intense delight, and making faces at her how or other originated with "poor Selina." behind her back.

up to Ascott, and big lad as he was, she are those who make others miserable. soundly boxed his ears.

On this terrible climax let the curtain fall. life.

CHAPTER II.

Common as were the small fends between or her "unfortunate way of taking things." Ascott and his Aunt Selina, they seldom reached such a catastrophe as that described their poverty and the toils it entailed, not all in my last chapter. Hitary had to fly to the the hardships and humiliation of their changrescue, and literally drag the furious lad back ed estate, were half so bitter to bear as this into the school-room; while Johanna, pale something—no moral crime, and yet in its and trembling, persuaded Selina to quit the results as fatal as crime—which they called field and go and lie down. This was not difficult; for the instant she saw what she had Ascott was the only one who did not attempt done, how she had disgraced herself and in to mince matters. When a little boy he had sulted her nephew. Selina felt sorry. Her openly declared he hated Aunt Selina; when passion ended in a gush of "nervous" tears. he grew up he as openly defied her, and it under the influence of which she was led up was a most difficult matter to keep even de-

that the little servant became uncommonly She knew of old that to stop the torrent was serious; yes, serious rather than sulky, for

Selina that Johanna had. She drew her elder It did, however, and its climax was worse sister into the little parlor, placed her in the

Every family has its skeleton in the house; failed from sheer exhaustion. And then, as this was theirs. Whether they acknowledged she flung herself on the sofa—oh, sad mis it or not, they knew quite well that every dischance!—she caught sight of her nephew comfort they had, every slight jar which disstanding at the school-room door, grinning turbed the current of household peace, some-They often called her "poor" with a sort of It was too much. The poor lady had no pity-not unneeded, Heaven knows! for if the more words left to scold with; but she rushed unhappy are to be pitied, ten times more so

This was Selina's case, and had been all her And, sometimes, she herself knew it. Sometimes, after an especially bad outbreak, her compunction and remorse would be almost as terrible as her passion; forcing her sisters to make every excuse for her; she "did not mean it," it was only "ill health," or "nerves,"

But they knew in their hearts that not all stairs and put to bed, almost like a child—the usual termination of these pitiful outbreaks.

For the time nobody thought of Elizabeth. was married, that appearing the easiest way The hapless cause of all stood "spectatress of of getting rid of her. Latterly she had ceased the fray" beside her kitchen fire. What she this earnest aspiration; it might be, because, thought history saith not. Whether in her learning to think more seriously of marriage, she felt that a woman who is no blessing in cons, the inevitable "worries" that would reher own household, is never likely much to sult from the presence of an additional membless a husband's; and that, looking still ber of the family, especially one from whom farther forward, it was, on the whole, a mercy the family skeleton could not be hid, to whom of Providence, which made Selina not the it was already only too fatally revealed. mother of children.

surprise; for she had been attractive in her really were, undistorted by her own likings or day, handsome and agreeable in society. But dishkings-in fact, without reference to herself perhaps, for all that, the sharp eye of the op at all. She perceived plainty that Johanna yosute sex had discovered the cloven foot; ought not to do the housework, that Selina since, though she had received various promis would not, and that she could not; ergo, they ing attentions, poor Selina had never had an must keep a servant. Better, perhaps, a small known to care for any body; she was one of influence as over a child, than one older and those women who would have married as a more independent, who would irritate her matter of course, but who never would have mistresses at home, and chatter of them been guilty of the weakness of falling in love abroad. Besides, they had promised Mrs. There seemed small probability of shipping Hand to give her daughter a fair trial. For a her off, to carry into a new household toe month, then, Elizabeth was bound to stay; restlessness: the fretfulness, the captious fault-afterward, time would show. finding with others, the readiness to take of to meet troubles half way. fence at what was done and said to herself, This explained, in Hilary's cheerful voice, which made poor Selina Leaf the unarknow | seemed greatly to reassure and comfort her ledged grief and torment of her own.

use of talking? . It would be only going over her month out, unless she does something very and over again the old thing; trying to ease wrong. Do you think that really was a lie and shift a little the long familiar burden she told?" which they knew must be borne. Nearly "About the cat? I don't quite know what every household has, near or remote, some to think. Let us call her, and put the quessuch burden, which Heaven only can lift off tion once more. Do von put it, Johanna. I or help to bear. And sometimes, looking don't think she could look at you and tell you round the world outside, these two congratu-a story." lated themselves, in a half sort of wave that Other people, at sight of that sweet, grave theirs was as light as it was; that Selina was face, its bloom faded, and hairs silvered long after all, a well-meaning well-principled wo before their time, yet beautiful, with an alman, and, in spite of her little tempers, really most childlike simplicity and childlike peace fond as a nature which has its centre in self ary's opinion. can manage to be.

her eldest sister's pale face, where year by year servant, unless we had managed to combine the lines were deepening, and saw how every the two." setually "hating" Aunt Selina.

"Where is that boy? He ought to be spoken to," Johanna said, at length, rising wear scolding. He is sorry, and promises never to on the whole, looking rather penitent and be so rude again."

"Oh no; not till the next time," replied Miss Leaf, hopelessly. "But Hilary," with about Elizabeth?".

The younger sister had thought of that. She the house than have told me what was not had turned over in her mind all the pros and true."

But Hilary was a clear-headed girl, and she Yet her not marrying had been somewhat a had the rare faculty of seeing things as they Nor, fortunately, had she ever been servant, over whom they could have the same

Her two sisters sat silent. What was the "Yes, love, you are right; she must remain."

fond of her family, as she truly was, at least as -most other people would have been of Hil-

"Sit down; I'll call her. Dear me, Johan-Only when Hilary looked, as to night, into ha, we shall have to set up a bell as well as at agitation such as the present shook her more But Hilary's harmtess fittle joke failed to and more—she who ought to have a quiet life make her sister smile; and the entrance of the and a cheerful home, after so many hard years girl seemed to excite positive apprehension. -then Hilary, fierce in the resistance of her How was it possible to make excuse to a seryouth, felt as if what she could have borne for vant for her mistress's shortcomings? how herself she could not bear for Johanna, and scold for ill doing this young girl, to whom, at the moment, sympathized with Ascott in ere she had been a night in the house, so bad an example had been set? Johanna half expected Elizabeth to take a leaf out of Selina's book, and begin abusing herself and Hilary.

No: she stood very sheepish, very uncom-"I have spoken to him; I gave him a good fortable, but not in the least bold or sulky humble.

Her mistress took courage.

"Elizabeth I want you to tell me the truth a sudden consternation, "what are we to do about that unfortunate breakage. Don't be afraid. I had rather you broke every thing in "It was true; it was the cat."

hand.'

thing agin the floor.'

This version of the momentous event was tom of "supping" porridge with milk. probable enough, and the girl's eager, honest manner gave internal confirmatory evidence confess, but Hilary, who even at twenty was pretty strong.

said about her word being always reliable."

a smothered choke.

ther go home to mother."

then waited till the pinafore, used as a pocke rantly beginning to own the allegiance, humble handkerchief, had dried up grief and restored vet proud, of Miranda to Ferdinand: composure.

"I can quite well understand the acciden now; and I am sure if you had put it as plain ly at first, my sister would have understood in too She was very much annoyed, and no Hilary always contrived to make his supper wonder. She will be equally glad to find she herself. was mistaken."

how to express what she felt it her duty to say. kitchen fire, she thought-a: now and then so as to be comprehended by the servant, and she let herself think for a minute or two in her means kindly always. You must take care and somehow she, like Johanna, trusted in not to vex her. Elizabeth; and you must never him. answer her back again, however sharply she Not exactly in his love; it seemed almost speaks. It is not your business; you are only impossible that he should love her, at least till a child, and she is your mistress."

. Hilary came to her aid.

I thought it was this 'un."

begin an imaginary search for a book, may consider me specially as your mistress,' strong energetic, manly will, which sometimes said Johanna, simply. "Remember always made Johanna say that instead of twenty five deception. Now go with Miss Hilary, and much about it. she will teach you how to make the porridge for supper."

big and correctorking a girl, made her rather that the present state of things was to go or lawkward at first. However, she succeeded in "How could that be possible? You were pouring out and carrying into the parlor, withcoming down stairs with the ewer in your out accident, three platefuls of that excellent condiment which formed the frugal supper of "Her got under my feet, and throwed me the tamily; but which they are. I grieve to down, and so I tumbled, and smashed the say, in an orthodox southern fashion, with sugar or treacle, until Mr. Lyon-greatly hor-The Misses Leaf glanced at each other rifled thereby-had instituted his national cus-

It may be a very unsentimental thing to rather practical than poetical, never made the "I am sure she is telling the truth." said porridge without thinking of Robert Lyon, Hilary. "And remember what her mother and the day when he first staid to supper, and ate it, or as he said and was very much laugh-This reference was too much for Elizabeth. ed at, ate "them" with such infinite relish. She burst out, not into actual crying, but into Since then, whenever he came, he always asked for his porridge, saying it carried him "If you donnot believe me, missus, I'd ra-back to his childish days. And Hilary, with that curious pleasure that women take in wait-"I do believe you," said Miss Leaf, kindly ling upon any one unto whom the heart is igno-

" To be your fellow You may deny me; but I'll be your zervant Whether you will or no."

Those pleasant days were now over. Mr. Here Miss Leaf paused, somewhat puzzled Lyon was gone. As she stool alone over the yet not let down the dignity of the family. busy prosaic life-of that August night, standing at the front door, of his last "good by," "Miss Selina is sometimes hasty; but she und last hand-clasp, right, warm, and firm;

she grew much more worthy of him than now; but in himself, that he would never be The subdued clouding of Elizabeth's face, less himself, less thoroughly good and true and her blunt pointing to Miss Leaf as "this than now. That, some time, he would be sure 'un," were too much for Hilary's gravity to come back again, and take up his old rela-She was obliged to retreat to the press, and rions with them, brightening their dull life with his cheerfulness; infusing in their femon-Yes, I am the eldest, and I suppose you ine household the new element of a clear, to come to me in any difficulty; and above the young man might be forty; and, above all, to tell me every thing outright, as soon as all. bringing imp their poverty the silent symit happens. I can forgive you almost any pathy of one who had fought his own battle fault, if you are truthful and honest; but there with the world-a hard one, too, as his face is one thing I never could forgive, and that is sometimes showed—though he never said

Of the results of this pleasant relationwhether she, being the only truly marriageable Elizabeth obeyed silently; she had appa person in the house. Robert Lyon intended to rently a great gift for silence. And she was marry her, or was expected to do so, or that certainly both obedient and willing; not stu-society would think it a very odd thing if he pid, either, though a nervousness of tempera Ind not do so-this unsophisticated Hilary ment which Hilary was surprised to find in so never thought at all. If he had said to her forever; she to remain always Hilary Leaf, soft, low voice, somewhere out of the New and he Robert Lyon, the faithful friend of the Testament; words simple enough for the family, she would have smiled in his face and comprehension of a child or a heathen. The been perfectly satisfied.

away the smile from that innocent face; no turned round to kneel down; but in her convague jealousies aroused; no maddening rn-fusion she knocked over a chair, causing Miss more affoat in the small world that was his Leaf to wait a minute till reverent silence was and theirs. Mr. Lyon was grave and sedate restored. Elizabeth knelt, with her eyes fixed in all his ways; he never paid the slightest on the wall: it was a green paper, patterned attention to, or expressed the slightest interest with bunches of nuts. How far she listened, in, any woman whatsoever.

And so this hapless girl loved him—just himself; without the s'ightest reference to his "connections," for he had none; or his "pros pects," which, if he had any, she did not know Alas! to practical and prudent people I can offer no excuse for her; except, perhaps what Shakspeare gives in the creation of the peor Miranda.

When the small servant re-entered the kit chen, Hilary, with a half sigh, shook off her dreams, called Ascott out of the school-room. and returned to the work a day world and the family supper.

This being ended, seasoned with a few quies words administered to Ascott, and which or the whole he took pretty well, it was nearly ten o'clock.

"Far too late to have kept up such a child as Elizabeth; we must not do it again." said Miss Leaf, taking down the large Bible with which she was accustomed to conclude the day—Ascott's early hours at school and their own house-work making it difficult of morn Very brief the reading was, cometimes not more than half a dozen verses, with no comment thereon; she thought the Word of God might safely be left to expound itself Being a very humble-minded woman, she did not feel qualified to lead long devotional "ex ercises," and she disliked formal written pray ers. So she merely read the Bible to the family, and said after it the Lord's Prayer.

beth?"

Elizabeth came.

piano, its six cane-hottomed chairs, and one might again rise. easy chair, in which sat Mise Leaf with the great Book in her lap.

"Can you read. Elizabeth?"

" Yes, ma'am.'

" Hilary, give bent Hille."

And so Elizabeth followed, guided by her else saw clearly enough, thought more of his not too clean finger, the words, read in that own noble self than of all his aunts put to-

"South Sea Islander," as Ascott persisted in True, she had never had any thing to drive calling her, then, doing as the family did, or how much she understood, it was impossile to say; but her manner was decent and lecorous.

"Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those hat trespass against us." Unconsciously Miss. Leaf's gentle voice rested on these words, so needed in the daily life of every human being, and especially of every family. Was she the only one who thought of "poor Selina?"

They all rose from their knees, and Hilary out the Bible away. The little servant "hung ibout," apparently uncertain what was next to be done, or what was expected of her to do. Hilary touched her sister.

"Yes," said Miss Leaf. recollecting herself, and assuming the due authority. "it is quitetime for all the family to be in bed. Take care of your candle, and mind and be up at six tomorrow morning."

This was addressed to the new maiden, who lropped a courtesy, and said, almost cheerful-'Yes, ma'am.''

"Very well. Good night, Elizabeth."

And following Miss Leaf's example, the other two, even Ascott, said civilly and kindly, : Good night, Elizabeth."

CHAPTER III.

THE Christmas holidays ended, and Accott It was the greatest household left for London. But, constitutionally shy as Miss Leaf was change the Misses Leaf had known for years, to do even this in presence of a stranger cost and they missed him sorely. Ascott was not her some effort; and it was only a sense of exactly a lovable boy, and yet, after the fashduty that made her say "yee" to Hilary's sug-lion of womankind, his aunts were both fond gestion, 'I suppose we ought to call in Eliza and proud of him; fond, in their childless old maidenhood, of any sort of nephew, and proud, unconsciously, that the said nephew was a big "Sit down," said her mistress: and she sat fellow, who could look over all their heads, down, staring uneasily round about her, as ifflesides being hardsome and pleasant mannerwondering what was going to befall her next, ed, and though not clever enough to set the Very silent was the little parlor; so small, Thames on fire, still sufficiently bright to make, that it was almost filled up by its large square them hope that in his future the family star

There was something pathetic in these three women's idealization of him-even Selina's, who though quarrelling with him to his face always praised him behind his back-that great, good looking, lazy lad; who, every body gether. The only person he stood in awe of Miss Leaf laughed, and the shadow vanishwas Mr. Lyon-for whom he always protested ed from her face, as Hilary had meant it unbounded respect and admiration. How far should. She only sail, caressing her, Robert Lyon liked Ascott even Hilary could. never quite find out; but he was always very will have a real sweetheart some day.

There was one person in the house who, strange to say, did not succumb to the all-of the little boys and girls, and there began dominating youth. From the very first there that monotonous daily round of school labor, was a smouldering feud between him and Eli-rising from the simplicities of c. a, t, cat, and zabeth. Whether she overheard, and slowly d, o. g. dog-to the sublime heights of Pinnock began to comprehend his mocking gibes about and Lennie. Telemaque and Latin Delectus. the "South Sea Islander," or whether her No loftier; Stowbury being well supplied with sullen and dogged spirit resisted the first at first class schools, and having a vague imtempts the lad made to "put upon her"-as pression that the Misses Leaf, born ladies and he did upon his annes, in small daily tyrannies not brought up as governesses, were not comthe general favorite, found little favor with the ren. new servant. She never answered when he "hollo'd" for her; she resisted blacking his Miss Leaf kept contentedly to the c. a. t. cat, boots more than once a day; and she obstidand d, o, g, dog, of the little butchers and banately cleared the kitchen fire-place of his kers, as Miss Selina, who taught only sewing, "messes," as she ignominiously termed valued came into the school-room but little durious pots and pans belonging to what he callering the day, scornfully termed them. The ed his "medical studies."

aggressive, and sometimes a source of private out of sympathy with a friend of hers, had amusement to the aunts, still, on the whole, it begun to show an actual gift for teaching was a relief when the exciting cause of it de-school. parted; his new and most gentlemanly port this a gift—all will allow; and chiefly those remely.

puriously strong likes and dislikes."

"You may say that, my dear; for she bright ens up whenever she looks at you."

rooms; and what reverence one inspires in ed Johanna. he domestic mind when one really knows now to make a bed or a pudding.';

pupils came in.

Ascott replied, "It's only my aunt!"

"Well, my pet, never mind. I hope you

"I'm in no hurry, thank you, Johanna." But now was heard the knock after knock -was never found out; but certainly Ascott. petent educators except of very small child-

Which was true enough antil lately. higher branches such as they were, she left Although the war was passive rather than gradually to Hilary, who, of late, possibly manteau being carried down stairs by Eliza who have it not, among which was poor Jobeth herself, of her own accord, with an air of hanna Leaf. The admiring envy with which sheerful alacrity, foreign to her mien for some she watched Hilary, moving briskly about weeks past, and which, even in the midst of froncelass to class, with a word of praise to one the tolorous parting, amused Hilary ex-land rebuke to another, keeping every one's attention alive, spurring on the dull, controlling "I think that girl is a character," she said the unruly, and exercising over every member Merward to Johanna. "Any how she has in this little world that influence, at once the strongest and most intangible and inexplicable -personal influence-was only equaled by the way in which, at panses in the day's work, "Does she? Oh, that must be because I when it grew dull and monotonous, or when have most to do with her. It is wonderful the stupidity of the children ruffled her own low friendly one gets over sauce-pans and quick temper beyond endurance, Hilary watch-

The time I am telling of now is long ago. The Stowbury children, who were then little "How I wish you had to do neither!" sigh- boys and girts, are now fathers and mothersd Johanna, looking fondly at the bright face doubtless a large proportion being decent ind light little figure that was flitting about tradesfolk in Stowbury still; though, in this putting the school-room to rights before the locomotive quarter, many must have drifted. elsewhere—where, Heaven knows! "Nonsense-I don't wish any such thing, a few of them may still call to mind Miss Doing it makes me not a whit less charming Leaf, who first taught them their letters—sitind lovely." She often applied these adjecting in her corner between the fire and the ives to herself, with the most perfect conviction window, while the blind was drawn down to ion that she was uttering a fiction patent to keep out, first the light from her own fading very body. I must be very juvenile also, for eyes, and, secondly, the distracting view of 'm certain the fellow-passenger at the station green fields and trees from the youthful eyes chay took me for Ascort's sweetheart. When by her side. They may remember still her ve were saving good by, an old gentleman who dark plain dress and her white apron, on at next him was particularly sympathetic, which the primers, torn and dirty, looked half nd you should have seen how indignantly ashamed to lie; and above all, her sweet face and sweeter voice, never heard in any thing their being "naughty children." They may taster than any of his grammar school boys. recall her unweared patience with the very She had forgotten all domestic grievances in a dullest and most wayward of them; her un vision of Thetis and the water nymphs; and failing sympathy with every infantile pleasure was repeating to herself, first in the sonorous and pain. And I think they will acknowledge Greek, and then in Pope's small but sweet that whether she taught them much or hule English, that catalogue of oceanic beauties -in this advancing age it might be thought ending with fittle—Miss Leaf taught them one thing—to love her. Which, as Ben Johnson said of the Countess of Pembroke, was in itself a " liberal education.'

and more restless spirit chafed against the her pinalore monotony of her life; when, instead of wasting her days in teaching small children, she would have liked to be learning, learning-every day she never thinks of mending though I gave growing wiser and cleverer, and stretching out her needles and thread myself a week ago. into that busz, bright, active world of which But she does not know how to use them and Robert Lyon had told her—then the sight of more toan a baby." Johanna's muck face bent over those dirry spelling books would at orce rebuke and comfort her. She telt, after all, that she would School, she says, and learned both marking not mind working on forever, so long as Jo and sewing." hanna still sat there.

long -especially after Ascott was gone. For all the little Hands to look after, as her mother Johanna, partly for money, and partly for says she did. All the better for us. kind mess, had added to her day's work four her wonderfully patient with our troublesome evenings a week, when a halt educated mother brats. It was only to day, when that here of one of her little pupils came to be taught to little Jacky Smuth hurt himself so, that I sa write a decent han I, and to keep the accounts Elizabeth take him into the kitchen, wash hi of her shop. Upon which Selina, highly in face and hands, and cuddle him up and con dignant, had taken to spending her evening fort him, quite motherly. Her forte is con in the school room, interrupting Hilary's solid tainly children." tary studies there by many a lamemation over the peaceful days when they all sat in the her." kitchen together and kept no servant. Selina was one of those who never saw the bright side of any thing till it had gone by.

· I'm sure I don't know how weare to man age with Elizabeth. That greedv-"

And growing," suggested Hilary.

"I say that greedy girl eats as much as any two of us. And as for her clothes-her mother does not keep her even decent."

"She would find it difficult upon three while between there is a-pounds a vear."

"Hilary, how dare you contradict me! am only stating a plain fact."

"And I another. But, indeed, I don't want to talk. Selina."

" You never do, except when you are wished to be silent; and then your tongue goes like candle and books into the chilly but quiet be any race horse."

"Does it? Well, like Gilpin's,

> "It carries weight, it rides a race, Tis for a thousand pound?"

could but ears, a thousand pounds!"

Selina was too vexed to reply: and for five had never known. quiet minutes Hilary bent over her Homer. which Mr. Lyon had taken such pleasure in they went to sleep-they had always slept sharper than that grieved tone which signified teaching her, because he said, she learned it

"Black Janira and Janassa fair, And Amatheia with her amber hair."

" Black, did you say? I'm sure she was as Hilary, too. Often when Hilary's younger black as a chimney sweep all to day.

"Her what? Oh. Elizabeth, you mean-"

"Her pinafore had three rents in it, which

"Possibly nobody ever taught her."

"Yes; she went for a year to the National

"Perhaps she has never practiced then Nevertheless, that winter seemed to her very since. She could hardly have had time, with It make

"You always find something to say for

"I should be ashamed if I could not find -omething to say for any body who is always abused."

Another pause—and then Selina returned t

the charge.

"Have you ever observed, my dear, the ex traordinary way she has of fastening, or rath er, not fastering her gown behind? She ju hooks it together at the top and at the walk

" Hiatus valde deflendus. Oh dear me! win I shall I do? Selma, how can I help it if girl of fifteen years old is not a paragon of i fection? as of course we all are, if we on could find it out."

And Hilary, in despair, rose to carry in room, biting her lips the while lest she show be tempted to say something which Selin called "impertinent." which perhaps it was from a younger sister to an elder. I do n et Hilary up as a perfect character. Throng -and I only wish it were. Heigh ho! if I orrow only do reople go on to perfection : a corrow, in its true meaning, the cherished

But that night, talking to Johanna held gether since the time when the elder sister must have a new gown, and you must give used to walk the room of nights with that pu Elizabeth your brown merino." ling, motherless infant in her arms—Hilary. anxiously started the question of the little gervant.

things to do, neither waiting to see if they are recalled them alt. comprehended by her, nor showing her how them so badly, that she gets a thorough scold

Johanna, in unconscious appeal to her pet's brown merino seemed to hurt her so she could stronger judgment.

"No, I don't. Far from stupid; only very ignorant, and you would hardly believe itvery nervons. Selina trightens her. She gets want of clothes. "I must be growing very on extremely well with me." That is," added the conscientions elder sister, still afraid of while Johanna planned and replanned-calmaking the "child" vain, "any one whom you exlating how, even with the addition of an took pains with. But do you think you can old cape of her own, which was out of the ever make any thing out of Elizabeth? Her same piece, this hapless gown could be made month ends to morrow. go?"

'Rather bear the ills we have, Than fly to others that we know not of:

and a thief would be worse than even a South without you.". Sea Islander."

"Oh yes, my dear," said Johanna, with a So give mea kiss; and good night, Johanna."

"By-the-by, the first step in the civilization of the Polynesians was giving them clothes. And I have heard say that crime and rage mally small things? And in its strange and often go together; that a man unconsciously solemn mosaic, the full pattern of which we feels that he owes something to himself and never see clearly till looking back on it from clean face and clean shirt, and a decent coat hand of Eternal Wisdom has put together, that on. Suppose we try the experiment of dress it is too common or too sutall? ing Elizabeth. How many old gowns have we?"

The number was few. Nothing in the Leaf family was ever cast off till its very last ex tremity of decay; the talent that

"Gars and claes look amaist as gude's the new"

being specially possessed by Hilary.

Hilary laughed, and replied not.

Now it might be a pathetic indication of a girl who had very few clothes, but Hilary had "I am afraid I vexed Selina greatly about a superstitions weakness concerning hers. her to-night, and yet what can one do? Se very dress had its own peculiar chronicle of the scenes where it had been, the enjoyments ning is so very unjust—always expecting im the scenes where it had been, the enjoyments possibilities. She would like to have Ehza she had shared in it. Particular dresses were beth at once a first rate cook, a finished special memorials of her loves, her pleasures, house maid, and an attentive lady's maid, and her little passing pains; as long as a bit reall without being taught! She gives her mained of the poor old tabric the sight of it

This brown merino—in which she had sat to do them. Of con se the girl stands gaping two whole winters over her Greek and Latin and staring and does not do them, or does by Robert Lyon's side which he had once stopped to touch and notice, saying what a pretty color it was, and now he liked soft-" Is she very stupid, do you think ?" asked feeling dresses for women-to cut up this old almost have cried

> Yet what would Johanna think if the refused? And there was Elizabeth absolutely in wicked," thought poor Hilary.

She lay a good while sitent in the dark, Shall we let her to fit the gannt frame of Elizabeth Hand .-Her poor kindly brain was in the last extrem-"And perhaps get in her place a story-teller ity of muddle, when Hilary, with a desperate -a tale-bearer-even a thier. No, no; let us effort, dashed in to the rescue, and soon made all clear, contriving body, skirt, sleeves and all "You have the best head in the world, my love. I don't know whatever I should do

"Luckily you are never likely to be tried.

I misdoubt many will say I am writing about small, ridiculously small, things. Yet is not the whole of life made up of infinitesisociety in the way of virtue when he has a far away, dare'we say of any thing which the

CHAPTER IV.

While her anxious mistresses were thus talking her over the servant lay on her him-She ble bed and slept. They knew she did, for counted over her own wardrobe and Johan-they heard her heavy breathing through the na's but found nothing that could be spared. thin partition wall. Whether, as Hilary sug-- "Yes, my love, there is one thing. You gested, she was too ignorant to notice the days certainly shall never put on that old brown of the week, or month, or, as Selina thought, merino again; though you have laid it so care-too stupid to care for any thing beyond eatfully by, as if you meant it to come out asing, drinking, and sleeping. Elizabeth maninesh as ever part winter. No. Utlary, you fested no auxiety about herself or her destiny.

She went about her work just as usual; a "She is very handy when one is ill," even little quicker and readier, now she was be Selina allowed.
coming familiarized to it; but she said nothing. "And I assure you I was talking most demonstrative nature.

Miss Hilary.

mean to have your little talk with her?"

room fire, the little people having just departed "I've no doubt of it—but do get on." ed for their Saturday half-holiday. Before "When she suddenly turned round, snatchclearing off the debris which they always left ed a clean towel from a chair back, and anbehind, she stood a minute at the window, other from my head—actually from my very refreshing her eyes with the green field oppo head, Johanna—and out she ran. I called site, and the far-away wood, crowned by a dim after her, but she took no more notice than if white monument, visible in fair weather, on I had been a cone. And she left the door which those bright brown eves had a trick of wide open-blowing upon me. Oh, dear; she lingering, even in the middle of school hours, has given me my death of cold." And Selina For the wood and the hill beyond belonged to broke out into piteous complainings. a nobleman's "show" estate, five miles off- Her elder sister soothel her as well as she the only bit of real landscape beauty that Hil could, while Hilary ran down to the front door ary had ever belield. There, during the last and, looked, and enquired every where for holidays but one, she, her sisters, her nephew. Elizabeth. She was not to be seen on field or and, by his own special request, Mr. Lyon, road; and along that quiet terrace not a soul had spent a whole long, merry, midsummer had even perceived her quit the house. day. ,She wondered whether such a day would "It's a very odd thing," said Hilary, returnever come again!

field looked smiling and green, specked here which—" and there with white dots which, she opined, might possibly be daisies. She half wished You are going to blame me. Whatever hapshe was not too old and dignified to dart across pens in this Louse you always blame me. And be?"

For at this instant somebody came tearing down the stairs, opened the front door, and did sisters were silenced. They quited her a lit--exactly what Hilary had just been wishing the, and then went down and searched the front one, where she had been lying in bed all ling. Evidently Elizabeth flight had not been morning, quite obliterated the little servant premeditated. from their minds. The two sisters ran hastily up stairs.

"It's Elizabeth, without her bonnet or

What can she be after? Just look."

Selina was sitting up, in undisguised terror and agitation.

"Stop her! Hold her! I'm sure she has gone mad. Lock the door, or she'll come hack and murder us all."

has been the matter?"

But it was some time before they could make out any thing. At last they gathered afraid after this she must go." that Elizabeth had been waiting upon Miss "Wait and see what she has to say for her-Selina, putting vinegar cloths on her head, self," pleaded Hilary. "Sne will surely be and doing various things about the room back in two or three minutes,"

She was undoubtedly a girl of silent and un-kindly to her; about the duties of her position, and how she ought to dress better, and "Sometimes still waters run deep," said be more civil behaved, or else she never could expect to keep any place. And she stood in her. "Nevertheless, there are such things as usual sulky way of listening, never answering canals," replied Johanna "When do you a word-with her back to me, staring right ont of window. And I had just said, 'Eliza-Hilary did not know. She was sitting, beth, my girl'—indeed, Hilary, I was talking rather more tired than usual, by the school to her in my very kindest way—"

ing. "What can have come over the girl? But spring was coming again, any how; the You are sure, Selina, that you said nothing

"Now I know what you are going to say. the road, leap the sunk fence, and run to see, perhaps you're right. Perhaps I am a nuis-"I think, Johanna-Hark, what can that ance-a burden-would be far better dead and buried. I wish I were!"

When Selina took this tack, of course her.

house all over. All was in order; at least in as much order shawl, with something white flying behind as was to be expected the hour before dinner. her. How she is dashing across the field! The bowl of half-peeled potatoes stood on the back kitchen "sink;" the roast was down be-But loud screams from Selina's room, the fore the fire; the knives were ready for clean-

"It's all nonsense about her going mad. She has as sound a head as I have," said Hilary to Johanna, who began to look seriously uneasy. " She might have run away in a fit of passion, certainly; and yet that is improbable; her temper is more sullen than furious. And having no lack of common sense she must know that doing a thing like "Who? Elizabeth! Was she here? What this is enough to make her lose her place at once."

"Yes," said Johanna, mournfully, "I'm

Her mistresses' annoyance became displeas-ted at a different conclusion. ure, and that again subsided into scrious ap- "Quiet yourself, Elizabeth," said she, taprchension. Even Selina ceased talking over king a firm hold of her shoulder, and making and over the incident which gave the sole her sit down, when the rolled-up apron dropinformation to be arrived at: rose, dressed, ped, and showed itself all covered with blood and came down to the kitchen. There, after spots. Selina screamed outright. long and anxious consultation, Hilary, observing that "Somebody had better do some-seious that she had done something blamable, thing," began to prepare the dinner as in pre- or was at least a suspected character. - Her Elizabethan days; but the three ladies' appe-warmth of manner faded; the sullen cloud of tites were small.

utterance to the hidden alarm of all, said-quickly as I can to Mrs. Hand's."

This agreed, she stood consulting with Jo- to elicit the whole story. mother in case that unfortunate child had not Selina's window, Elizabeth had watched three gone home, when the kitchen door opened, little boys, apparently engaged in a very favorand the culprit appeared.

rolled up round her waist, presented a most give a kick, and two of the boys ran away; forlorn and untidy aspect; but her eyes were the other did not stir. For a minute or so she bright, and her countenance glowing.

the other-when it's washed."

the wall, trying to recover her breath.

don't you speak to your servant?" (When, off. for remissness in reproving others, the elder -"your servant.") failed to bring the customary sullen look to ried him home, and left him comfortably set-Elizabeth's face, and when Miss Leaf, in her thed in bed, his senses returned, and his life milder tones, asked where she had been, she saved.

answered unhesitatingly-

"I've been down the town."

in one chorus of astonishment.

runned all the way there and back; but it was so." a good step, and he was some 'at heavy, though he is but a little 'un."

"He! who on earth is he!"

his mother lives in Hall street. Somebody tered in rare doses, exclusively as medicine. saw me carrying him to the doctor, and went and told her. Oh! he was welly killed, Miss wash your face and eat your dinner. We will Leaf—the doctor said so; but he'll do now, talk to you by-and-by." and you'll get your towel clean washed tomorrow."

While Elizabeth spoke so incoherently, and "Have I done any thing wrong, missis?" with such unwonted energy and excitement, "I did not say so. But drink this; and don't Johanna looked as if she thought her sister's talk, child."

But she was not, nor even in two or three fears were true, and the girl had really gone mad; but Hilary's quicker perceptions jumpdogged resistance to authority was rising in About three in the afternoon, Hilary, giving her poor duty face, when Hilary, beginning with, "Now, we are not going to scold you; "I think, sisters, I had better go down as but we must hear the reason of this," contrived by adroit questions, and not a few of them, hanna as to what could possibly be said to the It appeared that, while standing at Miss lite amusement of little boys in that field, go-Not, however, with the least look of a cul-ing quickly behind a horse, and pulling out Hot she was, and breathless; and with the longest and handsomest hairs in his tail her hair down about her ears, and her apron to make fishing lines of. She saw the animal inoticed a black lump lying in the grass; then, She took a towel from under her arm.—with the quick instinct for which nobody had "There's one on 'em—and you'll get back—ever given her credit, she guessed what had happened, and did immediately the wisest and Having blurted out this, she leaned against only thing possible under the circumstances, namely, to snatch up a towel, run across the "Elizabeth! Where have you been? How field, bind up the child's head as well as she dared you go? Your behavior is disgraceful could, and carry it, bleeding and insensible, to -most disgraceful, I say. Johanna, why the nearest doctor, who lived nearly a mile

She did not tell—and they only found it out sister herself fell under reproof, it was always afterward—how she had held the boy while emphatically "your sister"—"your nephew" under the doctor's hands, the skull being so badly fractured that the frightened mother But, for once, Miss Selina's sharp voice fainted at the sight; how she had finally car-

"Ay, my arms do ache above a bit," she said, in answer to Miss Leaf's questions. "He "Down the town!" the three ladies cried, wasn't quite a baby-nigh upon twelve, I reckon; but then he was very small of his age. And "I've been as quick as I could, missis. I he looked just as if he was dead—and he bled

Here, just for a second or two, the color left the big girl's lips, and she trembled a little. Miss Leaf went to the kitchen cupboard, and "Deary me! I never thought of axing: but took out their only bottle of wine—adminis-

"Drink this, Elizabeth; and then go and

Elizabeth looked up with a long, wistfull stare of intense surprise, and then added, and went about her afternoon business as coarse working girl. She felt, as she often if nothing had happened.

never came about. What, indeed, could they beth. No doubt the little servant had broken the strict letter of domestic law by running off we are not likely to have little boys halt killed in that highly eccentric and inconvenient in the field every day, she trusts you will not way; but, as Hilary tried to explain by a se-be running away again as you did this mornries of most ingenious ratiocinations, she had ing. She feels sure that you would not do fulfilled, in the spirit of it, the very highest such a thing, putting us all to so great annoylaw-that of charity. She had also shown ance and uneasiness, for any less cause than prompt courage, decision, practical and pru-such as happened to-day. You promise dent forethought, and above all, entire self-that?" forgetfulness.

"And I should like to know," said Miss Hilary, warming with her subject, "if those selves. Nay"-feeling in spite of Selina's are not the very qualities that go to constitute a warning nudge, that she had hardly been kind hero."

maid of-all work.''

"I'll tell you what we want, Selina. "Yeing to keep you as our servant." wanta woman; that is, a girl with the making "Thank you ma'am. of a good woman in her. If we can find that, Hilary. Yes, I'll stop." all the rest will follow. For my part, I would | She said no more—but sighed a great sigh, rather take this child, rough as she is, but as if her mind were relieved—("So," thought with her truthfulness, conscientionsness, kind-Hilary, "she was not so indifferent to us as liness of heart, and evident capability of both we imagined"—and bustled back into her kitself-control and self-devotedness, than the most chen. finished servant we could find. My advice is -keep her.''

rious fact that the "advice" of the youngest agreed upon; and there is certainly no time Miss Leaf was, whether they knew it or not. 10 be lost. Hilary, my dear, suppose you almost equivalent to a family ukase.

When Elizabeth had brought in the teathings, which she did with especial care, appatently wishing to blot out the memory of sit, and sleep together-loving one another the morning's escapade by astonishingly good and sympathizing with one another, ever so behavior for the rest of the day, Miss Leaf deeply and dearly-nevertheless inevitably called her, and asked if she knew that her have momentary seasons when the intense month of trial ended this day?

courtesy, comething between that of the old-litself painfully upon the heart. Johanna must v orld family domestic—as her mother might have had many such seasons when Hilary was have been to the Miss Elizabeth Something a child; Hilary had one now, she was named after—and the abrupt "dip". She unfolded the old frock, and took out of its pocket, a hiding place at once 'little likely constituted Elizabeth Hand's sole experience to be searched, and harmless if discovered, a of manners.

"If you had not been absent I should have day. gone to speak with your mother to day. In-deed Miss Hilary was going when you came shall come. Yours truly, Robert Lyon." in; but it would have been with a very differ- The only scrap of note she had ever reent intention from what we had in the morn-ceived; he always wrote to Johanna; as regagain."

"Eh?" said Elizabeth, inquiringly.

her two sisters. It was always a trial to her them; and then recoiled, as if the secret were shy nature to find herself the mouth-piece of a wrong to that dear sister who loved her so the family; and this same shyness made it well.

She was obeyed. By-and-by Elizabeth dis-still more difficult to break through the stiff appeared into the back kitchen, emerged barriers which seemed to rise up between her, thence with a clean face, hands, and apron a gentlewoman well on in years, and this complained, that with the kindest intentions, Her mistresses' threatened "talk" with her she did not quite know how to talk to Eliza-

"My sister means," said Hilary, "that as

"Yes, Miss Hilary."

"Then we quite forgive you as regards ourero."

"But we don't want a hero; we want a Elizabeth. And if you like to stay with us and will do your best to improve, we are will-

Thank you, Miss

"Now for the clothing of her," observed Miss Leaf, also looking much relieved that This settled the matter, since it was a cu-the decision was over: "You know what we bring down your brown merino?"

Hilary went without a word.

solitude in which we all live, and must expect "Yes, ma'am," with the strict tormal ever to live, at the depth of our being, forces

|poor little memento of that happy midsummer

ing. However, that is not likely to happen ularly as ever, or more so, now Ascott was gone; but only to Johanna. She read over the two lines, wondered where she should keep Miss Leaf hesitated, and looked uneasily at them now that Johanna might not notice thing ever could. She thinks me quite happy, to hear Hilary's approach. as I am; and yet-oh, if I did not miss him "I did not know you could write, Eliza-

And the aching, aching want which sometimes came over began again. Let us not most doleful of voices. "It bean't no good. blame her. God made all our human needs. I've forgotten all about it. T' letters wonns God made love. Not merely affection but join." actual Vove-the necessity to seek and find out even in marriage, this love is seldom found, suddenly. and it is possible in all lives to do without it. Johanna had doneso. But then she had been woman. Mrs. Cliffe, t' little lad's mother, you young, and was now growing old: and Hilary know; she wanted somebody to write to her was only twenty, with a long life before her. husband as is at work at Birmingham, and I Poor child, let us not blame her!

natural disposition inclining her to be more Selina says-Pm good for nowt." than cheerful, actually gay. She soon recove "Come, come, never fret;" for there was a ered herself, and when, a short time after, she sort of choke in the girl's voice. "There's stood, seissors in hand, demonstrating how many a good person who never learned to very easy it was to make something out of write. But I don't see why you should not nothing, her sisters never suspected how very learn. Shall I teach you?"

near tears had lately been to those bright eyes. Utter amazement, beaming gratitude, suc-le," said Selina. "If I were you, I would just Miss Hilary." make over the dress to Elizabeth, and let her do what she could with it."

the trouble by expecting people to do what your writing instead. Sit down and let me they can't do. I have to do it myself after-see what you can do." dle a needle and thread is competent to make behold, Elizabeth took the pen. a gown for herself, and I shall be most happy scratches resulted; blots innumerable; and to secede in her favor."

collision of words, "Selina is right; if you do Hilary thankful that she had taken off ner not teach Elizabeth to make her own gowns better gown for a common one, as, with sad how can she learn?"

"Johanna, you are the brilliantest of wo-nings. men! and you know you don't like the parlor littered with rags and cuttings. You wish to done, her contrition and humility were unget rid of me for the evening? Well, I'll go! bounded. "No, Miss Hilary, you can't make Hand me the work basket and the bundle, nothin' of me. I be too stupid, I'll give it and I'll give my first lesson in dress making up." to our South Sea Islander."

always busy, over the perpetual toil of those there. Whether the excitement of the mornwho have not yet learned the mysterious art of ing had roused her, or her mistresses' kindness arrangement and order, nor, as sometimes, had touched Elizabeth's heart, and—as in hanging sleepily over the kitchen fire, waiting most women—the heart was the key to the for bedtime; but actually sitting, sitting down intellect; for whether the gradual daily influat the table. Her candle was flaring on one ence of her changed life during the last month side of her: on the other was the school room had been taking effect, now for the first time inkstand, a scrap of waste paper, and a pen to appear-certain it is that Hilary had never But she was not writing; she sat with her perceived before what an extremely intelligent head on her hands, in an attitute of disconso-face it was; what good sense was indicated in

"But nothing makes me love her less; no-late idleness, so absorbed that she seemed not

beth."

"No more I can," was the answer, in the

"Let me look at them." And Hilary tried some other being, not another but the come to contemplate gravely the scrawled and blotplement of one's self-the "other half," who ted page, which looked very much as if a large brings rest and strength for weakness, sympa spider had walked into the ink bottle, and then thy in aspiration, and tenderness for tender walked out again on a tour of investigation. ness, as no other person ever can. Perhaps. "What did you want to write?" asked she,

Elizabeth blushed violently. "It was the said I would. I'd learned at the National, She was not in the least sentimental, her but I've forgotten it all. I'm just as Miss which were always the sunshine of the house. ceeded one another, plain as light, in Eliza"You are giving yourself a world of troub beth's eyes, but she only said, "Thank you,

"Very well. I have brought you an old gown of mine, and was going to show you how "My dear, I always find I give myself twice to make it up for yourself, but I'll look over ward. Prove how a child who can't even han- In a state of nervous trepidation, pitiful to one fatal deluge of ink, which startled from "Nay," put in the eldest sister, afraid of a their seats both mistress and maid, and made thriftiness, the Misses Leaf always did of evo-

When Elizabeth saw the mischief she had

"Nonsense!" And the bright active little But Fate stood in the way of Miss Hilary's lady looked steadily into the heavy face of this undeveloped girl, half child, half woman, until She found Elizabeth not as was her wont, some of her own spirit seemed to be reflected the well shaped head and forehead: what ten- "Suppose I were to hold my Polynesian" derness and feeling in the deep-set grey eyes. Academy on a Sunday?" and she looked in-up any thing: I never would. We'll try a Now the Misses Leaf were old fashioned

through the mysteries of caligraphy.

using of faculties which have been unused for to keep the lad out of mischief, and put into generations very difficult at first. To suppose his mind better thoughts than he was likely to that a working man, the son of working men, get from his favorite Sunday recreation of sitwho applies himself to study, does it with as ting on the wall throwing stones. After he little trouble as your apper-class children, who left for London there was Elizabeth to be have been unconsciously undergoing educa-thought of; and they decided that the best tion ever since the eradle, is a great mistake. Sabbath duty for the little servant was to go All honor, therefore, to those who do attempt, and see her mother. So they gave her every and to ever so small a degree succeed in the Sunday atternoon free; only requiring that best and wisest culture of all, self-culture.

after the lesson was over; "but there is a had noticed, Elizabeth not unfrequently spent dogged perseverance about the girl which I in dozing over the fire. actually admire. She blots her fingers, her "And I wonder," said she, giving the end nose, her apron, but she never gives in: and of her long meditation out loud, "whether she sticks to the grand principle of one thing going to sleep is not as much Sabbath breaking at a time. I think she did two whole pages of as learning to write? What do you say, Joa's, and really performed them satisfactorily, hanna?" before she asked to go on to b's. Yes! I be- Johanna, simple, God-fearing woman asshe lieve she will do."

said Selina, breaking into the conversation herself with the question. She only smiled rather crossly. "I'm sure I don't see the acquiescence. But Selina was greatly shockgood of wasting time over teaching Elizabeth ed. Teaching to write on a Sunday! Bringto write, when there's so much to be done in ing the week day work into the day of rest! the house by one and all or use from Monday Doing one's own pleasure on the holy day!

morning till Saturday night.

tively. "I don't see how I ever shall get time Whatever else might be said of them, the to teach her, and she is so tired of nights when Leafs were always a respectable family as to the work is all done: she'll be dropping asleep keeping Sunday. Nobody could say that even with the pen in her hand-I have done it my-poor Henry-self before now."

Ay, in those days when, trying so hard to "improve her mind," and make herself a lit-had been at first half annoyed and half amustle more equal and companionable to another ed, resumed her point seriously. mind she knew, she had, after her daily house "I might say that writing is'nt Elizabeth's cares and her six hours of school teaching, at-week-day work, and that teaching her is not tempted at nine v. m. to begin close study on exactly doing my own pleasure; but I won't her own account. And though with her strong ereep out of the argument by a quibble. The will she succeeded tolerably, still, as she told question is, What is keeping the Sabbath day Johanna, she could well understand how slow 'holy?' I say—and I stick to my opinion was the "march of intellect" (a phrase which that it is by making it a day of worship, a rest had just then come up) among day laborers day—a cheerful and happy day—and by doing and the like; and how difficult it was for these as much good in it as we can. And therefore Mechanics Institutions, which were now talk- I mean to teach Elizabeth on a Sunday." ed so much of, to put and new ideas into the "She'll never understand it. She'll considpoor tired heads, rendered sluggish and stupid er it work." with hard bodily labor.

"Nonsense," repeated she. "Never give quiringly at her sisters, especially Johanna.

different plan, and begin from the beginning, country folk, who lived before the words Sabas I do with my little scholars. Wait, while batarian and un-Sabbatarian had ever got into I fetch a copy book out of the parlor press." the English language. They simply "remem-She highly amused her sisters with a de-bered the Sabbath day to keep it holy;" they scription of what she called her "newly insti-arranged so as to make it for all the household tuted Polynesian Academy; returned, and set a day of rest: and they went regularly to to work to guide the rough, coarse hand church once-sometimes Selina and Hilary went twice. For the intervening hours, their To say this was an easy task would not be usual custom was to take an afternoou walk Nature's own laws and limits make the in the fields; begun chiefly for Ascott's sake, she should be at home punctually after church Of this honor Elizabeth deserved her share, time, at eight o'clock. But from thence till "She is stupid enough," Hilary confessed, bedtime was a blank two hours, which, Hilary was, to whom faith and love came as natural "I hope she will do her work, any how," as the breath she drew, had never perplexed She thought it exceedingly wrong. Such a "Ay, that's it," answered Hilary, medita-thing had never been heard of in their house.

> But here Selina's torrent of words stopped. When conversation revived, Hilary, who

"And if she did, work is a more religious stockings in my parlor, than in keeping Sun-coarse and the refined.

day as some people do—going to church gen"Well," she said, after a pause of consider-

for Hilary's cheeks were red, and her voice I shall like vou." angry. She was taking the hot, youthful part | Elizabeth smiled—that wonderfully bright, which in its hatred of forms and shams, some-sudden smile which seemed to cover over all times leads—and not seldom led poor Hilary— her plainness of feature.

a little too far on the other side. "I think," "Once upon a time," Hilary resumed by-Miss Leaf added, "that our business is with and-by, "when England was very different ourselves, and not with our neighbors. Let from what it is now, English ladies used to us keep the Sabbath according to our con-have what they call 'bower-women,' whom science. Only, I would take care never to do they took as girls, and brought up in their any thing which jarred against my neighbor's service; teaching them all sorts of thingsfeelings. I would, like Paul, 'eat no meat cooking, sewing, spinning, singing, and, probwhile the world standeth' rather than 'make ably, except that the ladies of that time were my brother to offend."

face, and the anger died out of her own.

"No, my love. It is lawful to do good on must conclude that—" the Sabbath day, and teaching a poor ignorant girl to write is an absolute good. Make her be discoursing miles above the head of her understand that, and you need not be afraid of little bower-maiden, and that, perhaps, after any harm ensuing."

said Selina, sullenly. "She is only a servant."

"Nevertheless I'll try."

Hilary could not tell how far she succeeded points—such as the following of the spirit and young mistress. the letter, the law of duty and the compulsion "I do believe the girl is getting fond of me," of love, which, as she spoke, seemed opening said she, half touched, half laughing to Joout so widely and awfully that she herself in-hanna. "If so, we shall get on. It is just as voluntarily shrank from it, and wondered that with our school children, you know. We have poor finite creatures should ever presume to to seize hold of their hearts first, and their squabble about it at all.

young mistress's kindness. She stood watch-likes me." ing the delicate little hand that had so patiently | Johanna smiled; but she would not for the for her future benefit. At last she said—

"You're taking a deal o' trouble wi' a poor this circumstance so very remarkable. wench, and it's very kind in a lady like you."

Miss Hilary was puzzled what answer to make. True enough it was "kind," and she was "a lady;" and between her and Mrs. Hand's rough daughter was an unmistakable difference and distinction. That Elizabeth A household exclusively composed of wo-perceived it was proved by her growing res-men has its advantages and its disadvantages. pectfulness of manner—the more respectful, it, It is apt to become somewhat narrow in judgseemed, the more she herself improved. Yet ment, morbid in feeling, absorbed in petty Hilary could not bear to make her feel more interests, and bounding its vision of outside sharply than was unavoidable the great gulf things to the small horizon which it sees from that lies and ever must lie-not so much be-its own fireside. But, on the other hand, by tween mistress and servant, in their abstract this fireside often abides a settled peace and thing than idleness. I am sure I often feel relation—(and yet that is right, for the relation that, of the two, I should be less sinful in dig-and authority are ordained of God)-but beging potatoes in my garden, or sitting mending tween the educated and the ignorant, the teelly in my best clothes, eating a huge Sunday ation, "you always have it in your power to dinner, and then nodding over a good book, repay my 'kindness,' as you call it. The clevor taking a regular Sunday nap till bedtime." erer you become the more useful you will be "Hush, child!" said Johanna, reprovingly; to me; and the more good you grow the better very ill-educated themselves, to read and write Hilary looked in her sister's sweet, calm also. They used to spend part of every day among their bower-women; and as people can "Shall I give up my academy?" she said, only enjoy the company of those with whom they have some sympathies in common, we

Here Hilary stopped, recollecting she must all, her theory would be best kept to herself, "You never will make her understand," and only demonstrated practically.

"So, Elizabeth, if I spend a little of my time in teaching you, you must grow up my faithful and attached bower-maiden?"

"I'll grow up any thing, Miss Hilary, if it's in simplifying to the young servant's compre- to please you," was the answer, given with a hension this great question, involving so many smothered intensity that quite startled the heads afterward. Now, Elizabeth's head may But one thing the girl did understand—her be uncommonly tough, but I do believe she guided hers, and now wrote copy after copy world have said-never encouraging the smallest vanity in her child—that she did not think and an enduring affectionateness which the keep, Miss," said Selina, crossly. "I never othe other sex can hardly comprehend or heard such nonsense. Is that the way you theless the truth, that we can "stand alone" thing open to her-clothes, books, money; better than they can; that we can do without trust her with all your secrets; treat her as them far easier, and with less deterioration of your most particular friend?" character, than they can do without us: that if 'A girl of fifteen would be rather an inconwe are better able to provide for ourselves in-venient particular friend! And I have happily terests, duties, and pleasures; in short, strange few secrets to trust her with. But if I could as it may appear, that we have more real self-not trust her with our coffee, tea, sugar, and sustaining independence than they.

CHAPTER V.

is that of man and woman united, no one will her being sent away to-morrow." be insane enough to deny; I am speaking of "Very fine talking; and what do you say, the substitute for it, which poor humanity has Johanna?-if that is not an unnecessary quesso often to fall back upon and make the best tion after Hulary has given her opinion. of—a better best very frequently than what "I think," replied the elder sister, taking no appears best in the eyes of the world. In notice of the long familiar innendo, "that in truth, many a troubled, care ridden, wealthy this case Hilary is right. How people ought family, torn with dissensions, or frozen up in to manage in great houses I can not say; but splendid formalities, might have envied that in our small house it will be easier and better quiet, humble, maiden household of the Misses not to alter our simple ways. Trusting the Leaf, where their only trial was poverty, and girl—if she is a good girl—will only make her their only grief the one which they knew the more trustworthy; if she is bad, we shall the worst of, and had met patiently for many v sooner find it out and let her go. vear—poor Selina's "way."

that her first place—the home in which she them her domestic position. From a "girl" received her first impressions—was this fem-|she was converted into a regular servant; her imme establishment, simple and regular, in pinafores gave place to grown-up gowns and which was neither waste nor disorder allowed, aprons; and her rough head; at Miss Selina's Good, too, that while her mistresses' narrow|incessant instance, was concealed by a cap means restricted her in many things enjoyed caps being considered by that lady as the by servants in richer families, their interests, proper and indispensable badge of servantequally narrow, caused to be concentrated up-thood. on herself a double measure of thought and To say that during her transition state, or care. She became absolutely "one of the fame even now that she had reached the cap era, ily," sharing in all its concerns. From its Elizabeth gave her mistresses no trouble, would small and few carnal luxuries—such as the be stating a s. f-evident improbability. What cake, fruit, or pot of preserve, votive offerings young lass under seventeen, of any rank, does from pupils parents—up to the newspaper and not cause plenty of trouble to her natural the borrowed book, nothing was either literal-guardians? Who can "put an old head on ly or metaphorically "locked" up from Eliza-young shoulders?" or expect from girls at the beth.

discussed in full conclave the day after her that unfailing self-control, that perfection of month of preparation ended, the sisters taking temper, and every thing else opposite sides, as might have been expected, all mistresses always have? Selina was for the immediate introduction of a locksmith and a key basket.

much signify: besides, if it did, we had only school teachers, more than she tried her three buttons on the press doors; but now she is our mistresses at intervals. She was often thoughtregular servant we ought to institute a regular less and careless, brusque in her manner, slovsystem of authority. How can she respect a enly in her dress; sometimes she was downfamily that never locks up any thing?"

we lock up every thing!"

I would be very sorry to keep her one day in Leaf. any house of mine."

purity, a long-suffering, generous forbearance, "Wait till you've a house of your own to Men will not believe, what is never-mean to behave to Elizabeth? leave every so on, and bring her up from the very first in Of course, that the true life, the highest life, the habit of being trusted, I would recommend

But Ehzabeth did not go. A year passed; I doubt not it was good for Elizabeth Hand two years: her wages were raised, and with most unformed and unsatisfactory period of This grand question of locking up had been life that complete moral and mental discipline, - which, of course,

I am obliged to confess that Elizabeth had a few—nay, not a few—most obstinate faults; "While she was only on trial, it did not so that no child tries its parents, no pupil its right "bad," filled full-as some of her elders " How can we respect a servant from whom and betters are, at all ages-with absolute naughtiness; when she would sulk for hours "Respect a servant! What do you mean, and days together, and make the whole family uncomfortable, as many a servant can make "I mean that if I did not respect a servant many a family small as that of the Misses her out in a lic, a meanness, or an act of de-thus to put before Elizabeth a standard of ception or dishonesty. They took her faults ideal perfection, a Quixotic notion of life-life as we must take the surface faults of all con-in its full purpose, power, and beauty-such nected with us-patiently rather than resent- as otherwise never could have crossed the mind fully, seeking to correct rather than to punish. of this working girl, born of parents who. And though there were difficult elements in though respectable and worthy, were in no rethe household, such as their being three mis spect higher than the common working class? tresses to be obeyed, the youngest mistress a I will not argue the point: I am not making thought too lax and the second one undoubt- Elizabeth a text for a sermon; I am simply edly too severe, still no girl could live with writing her story. these high-principled, much-enduring women without being impressed with two things which young woman's faults lessened: even that worst the serving class are slowest to understand-of them, the unmistakable bad temper, not the dignity of poverty, and the beauty of that aggressive, but obstinately sullen, which inade which is the only effectual law to bring out her and Miss Selina sometimes not on speakgood and restrain evil—the law of loving-kind-ling terms tor a week together. But she sim-for after both the girl's dismissal hung on a with a kind of dogged struggle not only against thread. The first was when Mrs. Cliffe, moth-the superior powers but against something er of Tommy Cliffe, who was nearly killed in within herself much harder to fight with. the field, being discovered to be an ill sort of "She makes me feel more sorry for her than woman, and in the habit of borrowing from angry with her," Miss Leaf would sometimes Elizabeth stray shillings, which were never say, coming out of the kitchen with that returned, was forbidden the house, Elizabeth grieved face, which was the chief sign of disresented it so fiercely that she sulked for a pleasure her sweet nature over betrayed "She whole week afterward.

But still they never lost what Hilary termed

The other and still more dangerous crisis in and more than many of us, poor child! Elizabeth's destiny was when a volume of Scott's novels, having been missing for some untarily the rest of the family, learned to put days, was found hidden in her bed, and she up with Miss Selina; who, on her part, kept a lying awake reading it was thus ignominious sort of armed neutrality. And once, when a ly discovered at cleven P. M. by Miss Selina, in short but sharp illness of Johanna's shook the consequence of the gleam of candle light from house from its even tenor, startled every body under her door. tual moral crimes. Hilary even roused a vol-fear-stricken unton against one common grief. ley of sharp words upon herself by declaring Selina allowed that they might have gone farthey had their source in actual virtues: that ther and fared worse on the day they engaged a girl who would stint herself of shillings, and Elizabeth. hold resolutely to any liking she had, even if After this illness of his Aunt. Ascott came unworthy, had a creditable amount of both home. It was his first visit since he had gone self-denial and fidelity in her disposition. Alto London; Mr. Ascott. he said, objected to so that a tired out maid-of all-work, who was holidays. But now, from some unexplained kept awake of nights by her ardent apprecia-feeling, Johanna in her convalescence longed tion of the "Heart of Mid-Lothian," must after the boy -no longer a boy. however, but possess a degree of both intellectual and moral nearly twenty, and looking fully his age. How capacity which deserved cultivation rather proud his aunts were to march him up the than blame. And though this surreptitious town, and hear every body's congratulations pursuit of literature under difficulties could on his good looks and polished manners! It not of course be allowed, I grieve to say that was the old story-old as the hills! I do not Miss Hilary took every opportunity of not on-pretend to invent any thing new. Women, ly giving the young servant books to read, but especially maiden aunts, will repeat the tale of talking to her about them. And also that till the end of time, so long as they have a large proportion of these books were-to youths belonging to them on whom to expend Miss Selina's namitigated horror-absolutely their natural tendency to clinging fondness. fiction! stories, novels, even poetry-books and ignorant, innocent hero worship. that Hilary liked herself-books that had built Misses Leaf-ay, even Selina, whose irritation up in her own passionate dream of life; where-against the provoking boy was quite mollified in all the women were faithful, tender, heroic, by the elegant young man-were no wiser than self-devoted; and all the men were—something their neighbors. not unlike Robert Lyon their "respect" for Elizabeth; they never found even Johanna satd sometimes, "dangerous"

One thing was certain, that by degrees the ply "sulked;" she never grumbled or was Two fracas, however, must be chronicled, pert; and she did her work just as usual—will have up-hill work through life, like usall,

But gradually Elezabeth, too, copying involjout of their little tempers, and made them It was true neither of these errors were ac-cling together and work together in a sort of

But there was one person in the household Did she do harm? Was it, as Selina and who still obstinately refused to bow the knee to Ascott. Whether it was, as psychologists might explain, some instinctive polarity in you coming Mr. Lyon over me." their natures: or whether, having once conceived a prejudice, Elizabeth held on to it like grim death; still there was the same unspo-Mr. Lyon-not half so much as Mr. Lyon, in ken antagonism between them. The young his steadily persistent letters to Miss Leaf, fellow took little notice of her except to ob- told her about her nephew Ascott. serve "that she hadn't grown any handsom- "I mean that I'll not be preached to like er:' but Elizabeth watched him with with a that by a woman. It's bad enough to stand keen severity that overlooked nothing, and re-lit from a man; but then Lyon's a real sharp sisted, with a passive pertinacity that was fellow, who knows the world, which women quite irresistible, all his encroachments on the don't, Aunt Hilary. Besides, he coaches me famity habits, all the little self-pleasing ways in my Latm and Greek; so I let him pitch which Ascott had been so used to of old, that into me now and then. But I won't let you; neither he nor his aunts apparently recognized so just stop it, will you." them as selfish.

gested her mistress, who not seeing any reason than the pettishness of the boy--frightened why Elizabeth should not speak the Queen's his little aunt, and silenced her. By-and-by English as well as herself, had instituted h's, she took comfort from the reflection that, as and stopped a few more glaring provincial the lad had in his anger betrayed, he had beisms.) "I cannot bear to see him, Miss Hil-side him in London a monitor whose preachary, lolling on the arm-chair, when Missis ing would be so much wiser and more effectual looks so tired and pale, and sitting up o' nights. than her own that she determined to say no burning double fires, and going up stairs at more. last with his boots on, and waking every body. I dunnot like it, I say."

He must work for the next examination."

"Why doesn't he get up of a morning then thinking. instead of lying in bed, and keeping the break- "Do you go to see him often?" she said at fast about till ten? Why can't he do his last. learning by daylight? Daylight's cheaper , 'Who? Mr. Lyon?" And Ascott, delightthan mould candles, and a deal better for the ed to escape into a fresh subject, became quite eyes."

and to try and make it out otherwise, even for He lives in a two-pair back, only one room, the dignity of the family, was something from which serves him for kitchen and parlor and which her honest nature revolted. Besides, all :' dines at a cook shop for nine-pence a the sharp-sighted servant would be the first to day, and makes his own porridge night and detect the inconsistency of one law of right for morning. He told me so once, for he isn't a the parlor and another for the kitchen. So bit ashamed of it. But he must be precious she took refuge in silence and in the apple-hard up sometimes. However, as he contrives pudding she was making.

nity of giving Ascott, by way of novelty, the very first honors going there, nobody asks any severest lecture that tongue of aunt could be-questions." That's the good of London life, stow. And this chance occurred the same at Aunt-Hilary," said the young fellow, drawing ternoon, when the other two aunts had gone himself up with great wisdom. "Only look out to tea, to a house which Ascott voted like a gentleman, behave yourself as such, and "slow," and declined going to. She remained nobody asks any questions." to make tea for him, and in the mean time public walks hard by.,

aunts, Ascott began to flush up angrily.

"Now stop that, Aunt Hilary: I'll not have

"What do you mean?"

For of late Ascott had said very little about Something new in Ascott's tone-speaking "I canna bear to see him" ("can not," sug-more of the resentful fierceness of the man

The rare hearing of Mr. Lyon's name—for, time and absence having produced their nat-"You forget: Mr. Ascott has his studies. ural effect, except when his letter came, he was seldom talked about now-set Hilary cheerful and communicative. "Oh, bless Hilary was puzzled. A truth was a truth, you! He wouldn't care for my going to him. to keep a decent coat on his back, and pay his But she resolved to seize the first opportu-classes at the University, and carry off the

"Yes," acquiesced vaguely Aunt Hilary. took him for a constitutional up and down the And then her mind wandered yearningly to the solitary student in the two-pair back. He Ascott listened at first very good humored-might labor and suffer: he might be ill; he ly: once or twice calling her "a dear little might die, equally solitary, and "nobody prig," in his patronizing way—he was rather would ask any questions." This phase of Lonfond of patronizing his Aunt Hilary. But don life let a new light in upon her mind. The when she seriously spoke of his duties, as no letters to Johanna had been chiefly filled with longer a boy but a man, who ought now to whatever he thought would interest them.. assume the true, manly right of thinking for With his characteristic Scotch reserve, he had and taking care of other people, especially his said very little about himself, except in the last, wherein he mentioned that he had "done pretty well" at the college this term, and meant family not to have neard of such a person. to "go in for more work" immediately,

toil, how much more poverty. Hilary knew was infinenced by that look and injen of true not. Perhaps even his successes, which As-gentlemanhool, as courteous to the poor maidcott went on to talk of, had less place in her of-all-work as he would have been to any thoughts than the picture of the face she knew, duchess born : and by that bright, sudden sharpened with illness, wasted with hard work smile, which came like sunshine over his face, and solitary care.

"And I can not help him-I can not help heart of every one that met it. him!" was her bitter ery: until, passing from | It opened that of Elizabeth. She relaxed the dream-land of fancy, the womanly nature her Cerberus keeping of the door, and even asserted itself. She thought if it had been, or went so far as to inform him that Miss Leaf if it were to be, her blessed lot to be chosen by and Miss Selina were out to tea, but Miss Robert Lyon, how she would take care of him! Hilary, and Mr. Ascott would be at home what an utter slave she would be to him! How shortly. He was welcome to wait in the parno penury would frighten her, no household for if he liked.

care oppress or humble her, if done for him Afterward, seized with mingled enriosity and and for his comfort. To her brave heart no imagiving, she made various errands to go in battle of life seemed too long or too sore, if and look at him; but she had not courage to only it were fought for him and at his side address him, and he never spoke to her. He And as the early falling leaves were blown sat by the window, gazing out into the gloamin gusts across her path, and the misty autumn ing. Except just turning his head at her ennight-began to close in, nature herself seemed trance, she did not think he had once stirred to plead in unison with the craving of her the whole time. heart, which sighed that youth and summer | Flizabeth went back to her kitchen, and last not always: and that, "be it ever so stood listening for her young mistress's familso bright and beautiful as the fireside of a love-too, for before she could reach it the door was inhome.

While the annt and nephew were strolling of all passers-by. At length one-a gentleman into the parlor, where they remained talking, -stopped at the gate, and looked in, then took without ringing for either tea or candles atull a turn to the end of the terrace, and stood galquarter of an hour. zing in once more. The solitude of the room | Miss Hilary at last came out, but much to apparently troubled him; twice his hand was Elizabeth's surprise, went straight up into her on the latch before he opened it and knocked bedroom without entering the kitchen at all. at the front door.

prise him.

"Is Miss Leaf at home?"

"No, Sir."

freedom of a familiar foot.

("I should ha' slammed the door in his before; and she never did again. face," was Elizabeth's comment afterward: "Don't you be troubling yourself with waitgentleman.") one another.

"I think I have heard of you," said he, smiling. "You are Miss Leaf's servant-Elizabeth Hand."

"Yes, Sir," still grimly, and with a determined grasp of the door handle.

"If, your mistresses are likely to be home soon, will you allow me to wait for them? am an old friend of theirs. My name is diligence and considerable excitement. Any Lyon."

And his knowing her was a tolerable proof of What this work entailed—how much more his identity; besides, unconsciously, the girl and like sunshine warmed and opened the

" as the song says, there is no place har knock. Mr. fivon seemed to have listened already opened.

There was a warm greeting-to her great thus, thinking of very different things, their relief: for she knew she had broken the doown fire newly lit-Ascott liked a fire-was mestic laws in admitting a stranger unawares blazing away in solitary glory, for the benefit - and then Elizabeth heard them all three go

It was some minutes more before she descend-Elizabeth appeared, which seemed to sur-led: and then, after giving her orders for tea, and seeing that all was arranged with special neatness, she stood absently by the kitchen fire. Elizabeth noticed how wonderfully bright "Is she well? Are all the family well?" her eyes were, and what a soft, happy smile and he stepped right into the passage, with the she had. She noticed it, because she had never seen Miss Hilary look exactly like that "only, you see, Miss Hilary, he looked a realling about here." she said; and her mistress seemed to start at being spoken to. "I'll get The stranger and she mutually examined the tea all right. Miss Hilary. Please go back into the parlor."

Hilary went in.

CHAPTER VI.

ELIZABETH got tea ready with unwonted visitor was a rare occurrence in this very quiet Now Elizabeth was far too much one of the family; but a gentleman visitor—a young gentleman too-was a remarkable fact, arousing Scott, Fenimore Cooper, Maria Edgeworth, both interest and curiosity. For in the latter and Harriet Martineau. When this strange quality this girl of seventeen could scarcely be gentleman appeared-in ordinary coat and expected to be deficient; and as to the former, hat, or rather Glengary bonnet neither particshe had so completely identified herself with ularly handsome nor particularly tall, vet the family she served, that all their concerns whose coming had evidently given Miss Hilawere her concerns also. Her acute comments ry so much pleasure, and who, once or twice on their few guests, and on their little schol-while waiting at tea. Elizabeth fancied she had ars, sometimes amused Hilary as much as her seen looking at Miss Hilary as nobody ever criticisms on the books she read But as nei-looked before—when Mr. Robert Lyon appearther were ever put forward intrusively or imper-ed on the horizon, the faithful "bower maiden" tinently, she let them pass, and only laughed was a good deal disappointed. ever them with Johanna in private. She had expected something better; at all

In speaking of these said books, and the events, something different. Her first brilquestions they led to, it was not likely butthat liant castle in the air fell. poor lass! but she mistress and maid—one aged twenty-two, and quickly built it up again, and, with the vivid the other seventeen—should occasionally light imagination of her age, she mapped out the upon a subject rather interesting to women of whole future, ending by a vision of Miss Hiltheir ages, though not commonly discussed ary, all in white, sweeping down the Terrace between mistresses and maids. Nevertheless, in a carriage and pair-to fortune and happiwhen it did come in the way, Miss Hilary never ness: leaving herself, though with a sore want shirked it, but talked it out, frankly and freely, at her heart, and a great longing to follow, to devote the remainder of her natural life to as she would to any other person.

"The girl has feelings and notions on the Miss Johanna. and she to herself; "so it is important that to her—and Miss Selina do worrit her so."

save her from much harm."

And so it befell that Elizabeth Hand, whose me to come, I'll stop. I reckon. Ay, I'll stop blunt ways, unlovely person, and temperament, wi' Miss Leaf." so oddly nervous and reserved, kept her from attracting any "sweetheart" of her own class, maid servant's dream was broken by the had unconsciously imbibed her mistress's the opening of the parlor door, and an outery of ory of love. Love, pure and simple, the very Ascott's for his coat and gloves, he having to deepest and highest, sweetest and most solemn fetch his aunts home at nine o'clock, Mr. Lyon thing in life: to be believed in devoutly until accompanying him. And as they all stood t came, and when it did come, to be held to, together at the front door, Elizabeth overheard irmly, faithfully, with a single-minded, settled Mr. Lyon say something about what a beauconstancy, till death. A creed, quite impostiful night it was. sible, many will say, in this ordinary world, "It would do you no harm; Miss Hilary;

a poor servant. "Yet a woman is but a wo- "If you like."

ives of women: far fewer unholy marriages. and desolated, drear, horneless homes.

parlor, and pendering. .

mind that no knight ever came to carry off "Some at's wrong. I'd like to know who's her charming princess-her admired and be been a-vexin' of her." thought fiercely the loved Mis-Hilary. Mis-Hilary, on her, past young servant.

matter, like all other girls, I suppose," reasher notions should be kept clear, and her feel-muttered Elizabeth, in the excitement of this ings right. It may do her some good, and Almaschar vision, relapsing into her old provincialisms. "So, even if Miss Hilary axes

This valorous determination taken, the poor and most dangerous to be put into the head of will you walk with us?"

man, be she maid-servant or queen: and if, Hilary went up stairs for her bonnet and from queens to maid servants, girls were showl: but when, a minute or two after, Eliaught thus to think of love, there might be a zabeth followed her with a candle, she found 'ew more "broken" hearts perhaps, but there her standing in the centre of the room, all in yould certainly be fewer wicked hearts: far the dark, her face white and her hands tremewer corrupted lives of men, and degraded bling.

"Thank you, thank you!" she said mechan jieally, as Elizabeth folded and fastened her Elizabeth, having cleared away her teadshawl for her-and descended immediately. hings, stood listening to the voices in the Elizabeth watched her take, not Ascott's arm, but Mr. Lyon's, and walk down the Terrace seemed totally indiffere , to the youth . No nobody had been "a-vexing" her mis-Stowbury; who indeed were, Elizabeth alterestress. There was nobody to blame; only ed, quite unworthy her regard. The only suit there had happened to Hilary one of those able lover for her young mistress must be things which strike like a sword through a somebody exceedingly grand and noble--a young and happy heart, taking all the life and compound of the best heroes of Shakspeare, youth out of it.

She had sometimes wondered in her own in the starlight.

-and she had had to hear it as a piece of sim-have been poor all my life, yet I never till ple news, to which she had only to say, "In-now felt an actual terror of poverty." deed!"-that to day and to-morrow were his Hilary shrank within herself, less even at two last days at Stowbury-almost his last in the words than at something in their tone-England. Within a week he was to sail for something hard, nay fierce; something at once India.

There had befallen him what most people would have considered a piece of rare good not like you. fortune. At the London University, a fellow derstand it." student, whom he had been gratuitously "No, I knew you could not," he muttered: "coaching" in Hindostance, fell ill, and was and was silent.

"thrown upon his hands," as he briefly defined | So was Hilary. A vague trouble came over services which must have been great since her. Could it be that he, Robert Lyon, had the; had resulted in this end. The young been seized with the auri sacra fames, which man's father—a Liverpool and Bombay mer-he had so often inveighed against and despischant-made him an offer to go out there, to ed? that his long battle with poverty had their house, at a rising salary of 300 rupees a caused in him such an overweening desire for month for three years; after the third year to riches that, to obtain them, he would sacrifice become a junior partner; remaining at Bom-levery thing else, exile himself to a far country bay in that capacity for two years more. This he told to Hilary and Ascott in almost gold?

as few words as I have here put it-for brevity seemed a refinge to him. It was also to one of is, would have been were it tenable-that them. But Ascott asked so many questions Hilary for an instant telt herself shiver all that his aunt needed to ask none. She only over. The next she spoke out—in justice to listened, and tried to take all in, and understand him she forced herself to speak out—all her it. that is, in a consecutive, intelligent, business honest soul. shape, without feeling it. She dared not let "I do believe that this going abroad to make berself feel it, not for a second, till they were a fortune, which young men so delight in, is out, arm-in-arm, under the quiet winter stars, often a most fatal mistake. They give up far Then she heard his voice asking her,

"So you think I was right?"

"Right?" she echoed mechanically.

"I mean in accepting that sudden chance, year." and changing my whole plan of life. 1 did not do it-believe me-without a motive."

tingly have asked; now she could not.

and yet in an undertone, that though Ascott most as much from you-I mean they would was walking a few yards off, Hilary felt was have been spent in work as engrossing and as meant for her alone to hear.

of a student to that of a man of business. I growing mercenary?" do not deny that I preferred the first. Once upon a time to be a fellow in a college, or a professor, or the like, was my utmost aim and I would have half killed myself to attain it. Now, I think differently."

He paused, but did not seem to require an Till then, you must trust me, Hulary."

answer, and it did not come.

want not to ruin my health with incessant a gleam of peace that nothing ever extin-

I knew an active life would soon set me right ory as a star from its place in the heavens. He does not wish to die. But." Mr. Lyon to come, were those five words, "You must pursued, "I have had a 'sair feeht' the last trust me. Hilarv." year or two. I would not go through it again, She did, and in the perfectness of that trust nor see any one dear to me go through it. It her own separate identity, with all lits cou-

Robert Lyon had, half an hour ago, told her is over, but it has left its scars. Strange! I despairing and aggressive.

"It is strange," she said: "such a terror is I feel none; I can not even unfor years, selling his very life and soul for Such a thought of him was so terrible--that more than they gain—country, home, health. If think a man has no right to sell his life any more than his soul for so many thousands a

Robert Lyon smiled-"No, and I am not selling mine. With my temperate habits I ·· What motive? she would once unhesita- have as good a chance of health at Bombay as in London—perhaps better. And the years I Robert Lyon continued speaking, distinctly must be absent I would have been absent alhard. They will soon pass, and then I shall . "The change is, you perceive, from the life come home rich-rich. Do you think I am

" No."

"Tell me what you do think about me?"

"I-can not quite understand."

"And I cannot make you understand. Perhaps I will, some day when I come back again.

It happens occasionally, in moments of all "I want, not to be rich, but to get a decent but intolerable pain, that some small thing, a competence and to get it as soon as I can. I word, a look, a touch of a hand, lets in such study. I have already injured it a good deal." guishes the light of it: it burns on for years "Have you been ill? You never said so." and years, sometimes clear, sometimes ob-"Oh no. it was hardly worth while. And scured, but as ineffaceable from life and mem-No fear! there's life in the old dog yet. Such, both then, and through the lonely years sciousness of pain, seemed annihilated; she did not think of herself at all, only of him, one but myself must help you. And I will, so and with him, and for him. So, for the time long as I am alive. Do you believe this?" being, she lost all sense of personal suffering. She looked up at him by the lamplight, and and their walk that night was as cheerful and said, "I do." happy as if they were to walk together for weeks and months and years, in undividedconfidence and content, instead of its being the last—the very last.

Some one has said that all lovers have, soon till-when and how? or late, to learn to be only friends: happiest! Returning, of course, he walked with Miss and satest are those in whom the friendship is Leaf; and throughout the next day, a terribly the foundation—always firm and ready to tall wet Sunday, spent by them entirely in the litback upon, long after the fascination of pas-tle parlor, they had not a minute of special or aion dies. It may take a little from the ro-private talk together. He did not seem to mance of these two if I own that Robert Lyon wish it; indeed, almost avoided it. talked to Hilary not a word about love, and a Thus slipped away the strange, still day—a good deal about pure business, telling her all Sunday never to be forgotten. At night, after his affairs and arrangements, and giving her prayers were over, Mr Lyon rose suddenly. as clear an idea of his future life as it was post saying he must leave them now; he was oblisible to do within the limits of one brief half ged to start from Stowbury at daybreak.

Then casting a glance round, and seeing that hanna. Ascott was quite out of ear-shot, he said, with that tender fall of the voice that felt, as some gland. Good by!" poet hath it,

"Like a still embrace,"

"Now tell me as much as you can about, yourself.

gradually he drew from Hilary a good deal, worthily, no parting is hopeless and no grief. Johanna's feeble health, which caused her overwhelming; but all the brightness of her continuing to teach to be very unadvisable; youth, all the sense of joy that young people and the gradual diminishing of the school— have in loving, and in being beloved again, in from what cause they could not account—fond meetings and fonder partings, in endless which made it very doubtful whether some walks and talks, in sweet kisses and clinging Lyon discussed a little—as far as in the atterly sometimes with a natural sharp sting of pain, indefinite position of affair was possible, but oftener with a solemn acquiescence, "It is Also, from some other questions or his, she the will of God; it is the will of God." lurked in her mind, and yet to which she life almost to bring some color back to the could give no tangible shape, about Ascott, white face of her darling, of whom she asked but he soothed it a little, advising with her as confessed any thing, many and many a night above all, a certain unspoken sense of union, sister took her in her arms like a baby -Joas if all that concerned her and hers he took hanna, too, said to herself, "This is the wift naturally upon himself as his own, gave Hila- of God." ry such comfort that, even on this night, with I have told thus much in detail the brief, a full consciousness or all that was to follow, sad story of Hilary's youth, to show how imshe was happy—nay, she had not been so hap possible it was that Elizabeth Hand could live py for years. Perhaps the the truth he told, in the house with these two women without the glorious truth of true love, that its recog-being strongly influenced by them, as every nition, spoken or silent constitutes the only person-especially every woman-influences perfect inv of life, that of the made one)-per- for good or for avil every other person connecthaps she had never been ahe was born.

him an assurance that in any and all difficulty, whether or not their sympathy be universal, she would apply to him.

"To me, and to no one else, remember. No

"And you promise?"

"Yes."

Then they loosed arms, and Hilary knew that they should never walk together again

"Shall we not see you again?" asked Jo-

"No. This will be my last Sunday in En-

He turned excessively pale, shook hands silently with them all—Hilary last—and almost before they recognized the fact. he was gone. With him departed, not all Hilary's peace or faith or courage of heart, for to all who love At first there seemed nothing to tell; but truly, while the best beloved lives, and lives change would not soon or late be necessary. arm. Such happiness was not for her; when, What this change should be she and Mr. she saw it the lot of others, she said to herself spoke to him about another dread which had. Johanna, too, who would have given her He could not remove it. he did not attempt in questions, and who never complained nor. to the best way of managing the wilful lad, when Hilary either lay awake by her side, or His strong, clear sense, just judgment, and, tossed and moaned in her sleep, till the elder coally happy sinceled with her, or dependent upon her.

Elizabeth was a girl of close observation and The last thing hed ! I to make her give keen protoption. Besides, to most people, 'so far as the individual is concerned, any deep affection generally lends eyes, tact, and deli-

fast Miss Selina observed, "What a fine daying to the family fireside, as usual, her harm-Mr. Lyon was having for his journey; what a less little joke, and her merry laugh at it and lucky fellow he was; how he would be sure herself-who shall say what lessons may not to make a fortune, and if so, she wondered have been taught by this to the humble servwhether they should ever see or hear any ant, dropping deep sown into her heart, to thing of him again"—Ehzabeth, from the germinate and fructify, as her future life's glimpse she caught of Miss Hilary's face, and needs required? from the quiet way in which Miss Leaf merely alone can know, who, through what (to us) ing to Selina about some other subject—Eliz-|seem the infinite littleness of our mortal existaboth resolved never in any way to make the ence, is educating us into the infinite greatness smallest allusion to Mr. Robert Lyon. Some-of His and our immortality. thing had happened, she did not know what: and it was not her business to find out; the family affairs, so far as she was trusted with them, were warmly her own, but into the family secrets she had no right to prv.

ing with her mistresses in the parlor; of the mable luxuries than horse hire, and a dinner stop, her voice faltered so; and of the night looked serious to a household which rarely when, long after all the others had gone to was more than five pounds beforehand with bed, Elizabeth, coming suddenly into the par-the world." lor, had found Miss Hilary sitting alone over He had begged Aunt Hilary to keep his sethe embers of the fire, with the suddest, sad-cret, but that was evidently impossible: so on dest look! so that the girl had softly shut the the day the school accounts were being written door again without ever speaking to "Mis- out and sent in, and their amount anxiously

Elizabeth did more: which, strange as it letter, full of penitence and promises: tress with a steady watchfulness, so quiet and no." silent that Hilary never found it out; saved her every little household care, gave her every sorrowfully exchanged looks. Little the lad little household treat. Not much to do, and thought about it: but these few words were less to be chronicled; but the way in which the very sharpest pang Ascott had ever given she did it was all.

in and find the parlor fire always bright, the the flesh." Like father like son." "The sins hearth clean swept, and the room tidy: never of the parents shall be visited on the children." to enter the kitchen without the servant's face So runs many a proverb: so confirms the unclearing up into a smile; when her restless erring decree of a just God, who would not be irritability made her forget things and grow a just God did He allow Hunself to break His quite vexed in the scarch after them, to see own righteous laws for the government of the that somehow her shoes were never misplaced, universe; did He falsify the requirements of and her gloves always came to hand in some His own holy and pure being, by permitting mysterious manner-these trifles, in her first any other wages for sin than death. 'And heavy days of darkness, soothed Hilary more though, through His mercy, sin forsaken esthan words could tell.

And the sight of Miss Hilary going about the house and school room as usual, with that Thus when on the Monday morning at break- poor white face of hers; 'nay, gradually bring-

CHAPTER VII.

Yer, long after Miss Selma had ceased to AUTUMN soon lapsed into winter: Christ-"wonder" about him, or even to name him-mas came and went, bringing, not Ascott, as his presence or absence did not touch her per-they hoped and he had promised, but a very sonally, and she was always the centre of her serious evil in the shape of sundry bills of his, own small world of interest—the little maid-which, he confessed in a most piteous letter to servant kept in her mind, and pondered over his Annt Hilary, were absolutely unpayable at old times every possible solution of the out of his godfather's allowance. They were mystery of this gentleman's sudden visit; of not large-or would not have seemed so to the long wet Sunday when he sat all day talk-rich people—and they were for no more blaevening prayer, when Miss Leaf had twice to or two to friends out in the country; but they may appear, a servant who is supposed to "I will be careful-I will indeed-if you know nothing of any thing that has happened will help me out this once, dear Aunt Hilary; can often do better than a member of the fam- and don't think too all of me. I have done ily who knows every thing, and this knowledge nothing wicked. And you don't know Lonis sometimes the most irritating consciousness don: you don't know, with a lot of young a sufferer has. She followed her young mis-fellows about one, how very hard it is to say

reckoned, she laid before her sisters the lad's

> At that unlucky postscript the Misses Leaf to his aunts.

During the long dull winter days, to come: "What's bied in the bone will come out in capes sin's penalty, and every human being has it in his own power to modify, if not to understand. conquer, any hereditary moral as well as phys- "We must not let the boy remain in debt; ical disease, thereby avoiding the doom and it would be such a disgrace to the family. alleviating the curse, still the original law re- "It is not the remaining in debt, but the mains in force, and ought to remain, an ex-incurring of it, which is the real disgrace to ample and a warning. As true as that every Ascott and the family.' individual sin that a man commits breeds multirudes more, is it that every individual the opening door; but it was too late. sinner may transmit his own piculiar type of weakness or wickedness to a whole race, dis-ladies had been so engrossed with their conappearing in one generation, re-appearing in versation that they had not noticed her—had another, exactly the same as physical peculiarities do, requiring the utmost caution of Her conscious face showed it; more especially education to counteract the terrible tendencies the bright scarlet which covered both herof nature—the "something in the blood" which cheeks when Miss Leaf said " Rush!" She is so difficult to eradicate: which may even stood, apparently irresolute as to whether she

The long life-curse of Henry Leaf the elder. into the room. and Henry Leaf the younger, had been-the women of the family well knew-that they were men who "couldn't say No." So keenly were the three sisters alive to this fault-it could hardly be called a crime, and yet in its consequences it was so-so sickening the terfor of it which their own wretched experience had implanted in their nunds, that during Ascott's childhood and youth his very fractiousness and roughness, his little seltishness, and good mother. Now co away." his persistence in his own will against theirs, had been haifed by his aunts as a good omen that he would grow up "so unlike his poor tather.'

small expenses could be contracted, its still no extra fires, no candles left burning to waste; smaller luxuries relinquished, in order that the and once a week or so, a few butterless breakmight so easily have done without! If they cheerfully, in both parlor and kitchen. The could have seen the weight of apprehension Misses Leaf never stinted their servant in any which then sank like a stone on these long, thing in which they did not stint themselves, lightened sometimes, but always—however phecies, the girl's respectful conduct did not Ascott might promise and amend—always abate: on the contrary, it seemed to increase, there! On such a discovery, surely, these two The nearer she was lifted to her mistress's "poor ghosts" would have fled away moan-level, the more her mind grew, so that she ing, wishing they had died childless, or that could better understand her mistresses' cares, during their mortal lives any amount or self-and the deeper became her consciousness at restraint and self-compulsion had purged from the only thing which gives one human being their natures the accurred thing: the sin which any real authority over another-personal had worked itself our in sorrow upon everytcharacter. one belonging to them, years after their own! heads were laid in the quiet dust.

Misses Leaf una imously came to; even Seli-a sort of pride in wasting nothing and in mana; who, with ai, her faults, had a fair share king the best of every thing, as the others did. of good techng and ct that close clinging to Perhaps, it may be said she was an exceptional kindred which is found in fallen households, servant; and yet I would not do her class the or households whom the sacred bond of com-wrong to believe so-I would rather believe that mon poverty, has drawn together in a way that there are many such among it; many good,

"Hush, Hilary," said Johanna, pointing to Elizabeth, coming suddenly in-or else the make the third and fourth generation execrate should run away again; and then her native the memory of him or her who was its origin. honesty got the upper hand, and she advanced

> "If you please, missis, I didn't mean tobut I've heard—"

> "What have you heard; that is, how much?"

> "Just what Miss Hilary said. Don't be afcared. I shan't tell. I never chatter about the tamily. Mother told me not."

"You owe a great deal, Elizabeth, to your

" And another time," said Miss Selina, " knock at the door."

This was Elizabeth's first initiation into what many a servant has to share—the secret If the two unhappy Henry Leafs-father burden of the family. After that day, though and son-could have come out of their graves they did not actually confide in her, her misthat night and beheld these three women, tresses used no effort to conceal that they had daughters and sisters, sitting with Ascott's let-cares: that the domestic economies must, this ter on the table, planning how the household's winter, be especially studied; there must be boy might honorably pay for pleasures he fasts or meatless dinners must be partaken of tried hearts, never to be afterward removed: Stratige to say, in spite of Miss Selma's pro-

Therefore, though the family means were narrowed, and the family luxuries few, Eliza-"We must do it," was the conclusion the both cheerfully put up with all : she even felt large, well-to-do home circles can never quite honest, faithful girls, who only need good mistresses untolwhom to be honest and faithful, but what he wrote was like what he spoke, and they would be no less so than Elizabeth the accurate reflection of his own clear, orig-

Hand.

The months went by—heavy and anxious months: for the school gradually dwindled cause, nominally, they were addressed to Joaway, and Ascott's letter—now almost the only hanna. This might have been from some connection his aunts had with the outer world, crotchet of over-reserve, delicacy, or honorfor poverty necessarily diminished even their the same which made him part from her for small Stowbury society—became more and years with no other word than 'You must, more unsatisfactory; and the want of infor-trust me, Hilary;" but whatever it was she mation in them was not supplied by those other respected it, and she did trust him. letters which had once kept Johanna's heart whether Johanna answered his letters or not, easy concerning the boy.

vember December, January, February, March that he betrayed.

wonder how soon a letter would come, wheth-kind had been the scarcely remembered father. er a letter ever would come again. And some-the too well remembered brother, and the anxtimes—the sharp present stinging her with its iously watched nephew, thanked God that small daily pains, the future looking dark there seemed to be one man in the world whom before her and them all—she felt so forlorn a woman could lean her heart upon, and not so forsaken, that but for a certain tiny well-feel the support break like a reed beneath her spring of hope, which rarely dries up till long -one man whom she could entirely believe in. after three and twenty, she could have sat and safely and sacredly trust. down and sighed, "My good days are done."

Rich people break their hearts much sooner than poor people; that is, they more easily get into that morbid state which is glorified by the term, "a broken heart." Poor people can not afford it. Their constant labor "physics pain." Their few and narrow pleasures sel- away more than three years. But in the modom pall. Holy poverty! black as its dark notonous life of the three sisters at Stowbury, side is, it has its bright side too, that is, when nothing was changed. Except, perhaps, Elizit is honest, fearless, free from selfishness, aboth, who had grown quite a woman; might wastefulness, and bickerings: above all, free have passed almost for thirty: so solidly old from the terror of debt.

"We'll starve we'll go into the work house rather than we'll go into debt!" cried Hilary hospitals and his examinations, and was now once, in a passion of tears, when she was in fitted to commence practice for himself. sore want of a shawl, and Selina urged her to godfather had still continued his allowance, get it, and wait till she could pay for it. "Yes: though once or twice, when he came down to the work house! It would be less shame to Stowbury, he had asked his aunts to help him be honorably indebted to the laws of the land on small debts- the last time in one a little than to be meanly indebted, under false pre-more serious; when, after some sad and sore tences, to any individual in it."

lessons, she got next month enough money to ance. For they were poorer than they used buy a shawl, and a bonnet, too—nay, by great to be: many more schools had arisen in the ingenuity, another bonnet for Johanna—Hil-town, and theirs had dwindled away. It was ary could have danced and sang--sang, in the becoming a source of serious anxiety whether gladness and relief of her heart, the glorious they could possibly make ends meet; and euthanasia of poverty.

ly: the daily life was hard still; ay, very hard, together with a fond, grateful letter that was even though at last came the letter from " for-worth it all—the aunts were deeply thankful, eign parts;" and following it, at regular in and very happy. tervals, other letters. They were full of facts But still the school declined. One night rather than feelings-simple, straightforward; they were speculating upon the causes of this, worth little as literary compositions; school-and Hilary was declaring, in a half jocular. master and learned man as he was, there was half earnest way, that it must be because a nothing literary or poetical about Mr. Lyon; prophet is never a prophet in his own counlinal mund and houest, tender heart.

His letters gave none the less comfort bemonth by month they unfailingly came, keep-Mr. Lyon had written once before sailing, ingher completely informed of all his proceednay, after sailing, for he had sent it home by ings, and letting out, as epistles written from the pilot from the English Channel; then over the seas often do, much more of himself there was, of course, 'silence. October, No-land his character than he was probably aware

-how often did Hilary count the months, and And Hilary, whose sole experience of man-

CHAPTER VIII.

Time slipped by. Robert Lyon had been fashioned were her figure and her manners.

Ascott Leaf had finished his walking the consultation, it had been resolved to tell him And when, in payment for some accidental he must contrive to live within his own allowwhen, the next Christmas, Ascott sent them a But these things happened only occasional-five pound note-an actual five pound note, how clever I am. Only, it is a useless sort of who prefers being helped to helping himself, in which case eleverness, I fear. Greek, Latin, and mathe- "I remain, Madam, your obedient servant," matics are no good to infants under seven, such as Stowbury persists in sending to us."

children-and perhaps it is true," said Miss be the first to comment upon it, Leaf.

"I wish you had not to teach at all. I wish I was a daily governess—I might be, and earn perfectly brutal." enough to keep the whole family; only, not here."

we shall have to make a change."

sister to see how the younger brightened up at dear," said Johanna, sighing. the word. "Where to-London? Oh, I have so longed to go and live in London! thought you would not like it. Johanna.'

health had made prematurely old, would willingly have ended her days in the familiar stout, bullet-headed grocer's boy, who used to town; but Hilary was young and strong. Johanna called to mind the days when she too At you—you mean. Wasn't he called had felt that rest was only another name for your beau?" said Hilary mischnevously, apon hanna called to mind the days when she too dullness; and when the most difficult thing which Selina drew herself up in great indigpossible to her was what seemed now so easy nation. —to sit down and endure.

Besides, unlike herself, Hilary had her life all before her. It might be a happy life, safe in a good man's tender keeping; those unfailing letters from India seemed to prophecy that it would. But no one could say. Miss Leaf's faith in either men or happiness.

Still, whatever Hilary's future might be, it would likely be a very different one from that Hilary. quiet, colorless life of hers. And as she looked at her younger sister, with the twilight glow advantage-they have nobody to ask advice on her face—they were taking an evening stroll up and down the terrace—Johanna hoped and prayed it might be so. Her own lot seemed has but to make itself up, and act accordingly. easy enough for herself; but for Hilary-she Thus within an hour or two of the receipt of would like to see Hilary something better than a poor schoolmistress at Stowbury.

No more was said at that time, but Johanna had the deep, still, Mary-like nature, which little talk with her. "kept" things, and "pondered them in her "Eh! what's wrong heart." So that when the subject came up a-grumbling at me?" again she was able to meet it with that sweet calmness which was her especial characteris-which, though of course they never ought to tic-the unruffled peace of a soul which no have, servants do have as well as their supeworldly storms could disturb overmuch, for riors. Hilary perceived this by the way she it had long since east anchor in the world unseen.

the Great Metropolitan Hegira, as Hilary replied, composedlycalled it; was a letter from Mr. Ascott, as follows:

"His education complete, I consider that I have done my duty by him; but I may assist him occassonally still, unless "The Stowbury people will never believe he turns out as his father did before him-a young man

"PETER ASCOTT."

The sisters read this letter, passing it round "They think I am only fit to teach little the table, none of them apparently liking to Hilary said:

"I think that reference to poor Henry is

"And yet he was very kind to Henry. And if it had not been for his common sense in send-"I wonder, said Johanna, thoughtfully, "if ing poor little Ascott and the nurse down to Stowbury the baby might have died. But you "A change!" It almost pained the elder don't remember any thing of that time. my

"He has been kind enough, though he has But I done it in such a patronizing way." observed Sclina. "I suppose that's the real reason of That was true. Miss Leat, whom feeble his doing it. He thinks it fine to patronize us, and show kindness to our family; he, the sit and stare at us all church time."

And then they tell to talking of that anxions question—Ascott's future. A little they reproached themselves that they had left the lad so long in London—so long out of the influence that might have counteracted the evil, sharply hinted in his godfather's letter. But own experience had not led her to place much once away-to hire him back to their poor home was impossible.

"Suppose we were to go to him," suggested

The poor and friendless possess one great of; nobody to whom it matters much what they do or where they go. The family mind Mr. Ascott's letter Hilary went into the kitchen, and told Elizabeth that as soon as her work was done Miss Leaf wished to have a

"Eh! what's wrong? Has MissSelina been

Elizabeth was in one of her bad humors, threw the coals on and tossed the chairs about. But to-day her heart was full of far more se-The chance which revived the question of rious cares than Elizabeth's ill temper.

> "I have not heard that either of my sisters is displeased with you. What they want to talk to you about is for your own good. We [&]quot; Miss Leap. "MADAM,-1 shall be obliged by your informing me if it are thinking of making a great change. is your wish, as it seems to be your nephew's, that instead intend to leave Stowbury and going to live in of returning to Stewbury, he should settle in London as a London."

"Going to live in London!"

were—her heart taught her these things—Eli-liked to express. "Come, my girl," she add-zabeth's head was a thorough Saxon one, ed. "you needn't look so serious. We are not slow to receive impressions. It was a family in the least vexed with you; we shall be very saying, that nothing was so hard as to put a sorry to lose you, and we will give you the new idea into Elizabeth except to get it out best of characters when you leave." again.

For this reason Hilary preferred paying the den intelligence of their contemplated change, from the parlor.

"Well, what do you say to the plan?" ask- "Who would have thought it!" exclaimed ed she, good humoredly.

"I dunnot like it at all," was the brief gruff

answer of Elizabeth Hand.

that no human being is good for much unless to hide her tears by being very busy over he or she has what is called "a will of one's something. Her mistress took no notice, but own." Perhaps this, like many another creed, began, as usual on washing days, to assist in was with her the result of circumstances. But various domestic matters, in the midst of she held it firmly, and with that exaggerated which she said, quietly, one-sidedness of teeling which any bitter fam- "And so, Elizabeth, you would really like ily or personal experience is sure to leave be-to go to London?" hind-a strong will was her first attraction to: "No! I shouldn't like it at all; never said every body. It had been so in the case of I should. But if you go, I shall go too; though Robert Lyon, and not less in Elizabeth's.

When the maid began sweeping up her hearth "You always said it was for a girl's good to the wisest and most dignified thing a mistress to another, I aren't that's all." could do under the circumstances, and which Rude as the form of the speech was--almost she knew was the sharpest rebuke she could the first rude speech that Elizabeth had ever administer to the sensitive Elizabeth-she made to Miss Hilary, and which, under other immediately quitted the kitchen.

ring; and though it was washing day, no Miss That which lay beneath it, the sharpness of Hilary appeared to help in folding up the wounded love, touched her heart. She felt clothes. Elizabeth, subdued and wretched. that, for all the girl's rough manner, it would waited till she could wait no longer; then have been hard to go into her London kitchen knocked at the door, and asked humbly if she and meet a strange London face; instead of should bring in supper?

The extreme kindness of the answer, to the effect that she must come in, as they wanted to that London life might have many difficulties, speak to her, crushed the lingering fragments that, for the present at least, her wages could of ill humor out of the girl.

Elizabeth: now we wish to have a little talk they were at Stowbury.

with you about yours."

" Eh?"

"We conclude you will not wish to go with will get into practice." us to London: and it would be hardly advis-, "Is it on account of him you're going, Miss able you should. You can get higher wages Hilary?" now than any we can afford to give you; indeed, we have more than once thought of tell-rather than grateful.

er wages than she was worth. Hitherto. ell." however, the arrangement has been quite fair: you know, Elizabeth, you have given us a deal as a perfect character. She had her fierce dis-

Leaf smiled, half sadly, as if this, the first of Now, quick as her tact and observation the coming changes, hurt her more than she

"I dunnot-mean-to leave."

Elizabeth threw out the words like pellets, way quietly, before startling her with the sud- in a choked fashion, and disappeared suddenly

Selina; "I declare the girl was crying."

No mistake about that : though when, a few minutes after, Miss Hilary entered the kitchen, Now it was one of Miss Hilary's doctrines Elizabeth tried in a hurried, shamefaced way

Missis is so ready to get shut o' me."

But this quality has its inconveniences. "It was for your own good, you know."

with a noisy, angry gesture, the mistress did stop in one place; and if you think I'm going circumstances she would have felt bound se-For an hour atter the parlor bell did not verely to reprove—the mistress passed it over.

that fond homely one of Elizabeth Hand's.

Still, she thought it right to explain to her not be raised, and the family might at first be "Miss Hilary has told you, our future plans, in even more straitened circumstances than

"Only at first, though, for I hope to find plenty of pupils, and by-and-by our nephew

"Ghiefly,"

Elizabeth gave a grunt which said as plainly ing you so, and offering you your choice of as words could say, "I thought so;" and retrying for a better place." lapsed into what she, no doubt, believed to be "You're very kind," was the answer, stolid virtuous indignation, but which, as, it was testified against the wrong parties, was open "No: I think we are merely honest. We to the less favorable interpretation of ill hushould never think of keeping a girl upon low-mor-a small injustice not uncommon with us

I do not pretend to paint this young woman of trouble in the teaching of you." And Miss likes as well as her strong fidelities; her faults with, as all of us have to struggle to the very windows of the Town Hall, where the open-air end of our days. Oftentimes not till the battle 'ca drinkers had adjourned to dance country is nigh over-sometimes not till it is quite over dances, by eivid permission, and in perfectly —does God give us the victory.

Without more discussion on either side, it was agreed that Elizabeth should accompany some natural regret, her spirit stretched itself her mistresses. Even Mrs. Hand seemed to out eagerly from the narrowness of the place be rleased thereat, her only doubt being lest where she was born into the great wide world: her daughter should meet and be led astray by the world where so many grand things were that bad woman, Mrs. Cliffe. Tommy Cliffe's thought and written and done; the world mother, who was reported to have gone to Robert Lyon had so long fought with, and London. But Miss Hilary explained that this was fighting bravely still-" I wonder, Elizameeting was about as probable as the rencon-beth, what sort of place London is, and what tre of two needles in a hay-rick; and besides, our life will be in it?" Elizabeth was not the sort of girl to be, easily "led astray" by any body.

"No, no; her's a good wench, though I says it," replied the mother, who was too hard worked to have much sentiment to spare. "I wish the little 'uns may take pattern by our Elizabeth. You'll send her home, maybe, in had known!—she also was prepared. two or three years' time, to let us have a look at her?"

Miss Hilary promised, and then took her way back through the familiar old tewn-so soon to be familiar no more—thinking anxiously, in spite of herself, upon those two or three years, and what they might bring.

It happened to be a notable day—that subshiny 28th of June-when the little, roundhad the crown of three kingdoms first set upon her youthful head: and Stowbury, like every other town in the land, was a perfect bower of green arches, garlands, banners; white covered tables were spread in the open vir down almost every street, where poor men dined, or poor women drank tea: and every body was out and abroad, looking at or sharing in the noliday making, wild with merriment, and Maiden Queen.

That day is now twenty-four years ago; but all those who remember it must own there never has been a day like it, when, all over the country, every man's heart throbbed with chivalrous devotion, every woman's with womanly tenderness, toward this one royal girl. who, God bless her! has lived to retain and deserve it all.

Hilary called for, and protected through the crowd, the little, timid, widow lady who had taken off the Misses Leaf's hands their house window, and furniture, and whom they had made very happy—as the poor often can make those still within and without, which had to be struggled numph? which came down through the lighted respectable jollity.

"I wonder," said Hilary-while, despite Elizabeth said nothing. For the moment her face seemed to catch the reflected glow of her mistress's, and then it settled down into that look of mingled resistance and resolution which was habitual to her. For the life that was to be, which neither knew—oh, if they

CHAPTER IX.

The day of the Grand Hegira cume.

"I remember," said Miss Leaf, as they rumbled for the last time through the empty morning streets of poor old Stowbury: "I rememcheeked damsel, who is a grandmother now, ber my grandmother telling me that when my grandfather was courting her, and she out of coquetry refused him, he set off on horseback to London, and she was so wretched to think of all the dangers he ran on the journey, and in Lendon itself, that she never rested till she got him back, and then immediately married him."

"No such catastrophe is likely to happen to any of us, except, perhaps, to Elizabeth," said brimming over with passionate loyalty to the Miss Hilary, trying to get up a little feeble mirth, any thing to pass away the time and lessen the pain of parting, which was almost too much for Johanna. "What do you say? Do you mean to get married in London, Elizabeth ?"

But Elizabeth could make no answer, even to kind Miss Hilary. They had not imagined she felt the leaving her native place so much. She had watched intently the last glimpse of Stowbury church tower, and now sat with reddened eyes, staring blankly out of the carriage poorer than themselves -- by refusing to accept Once or twice a large slow tear gathered on any thing for the "good will" of the school, each of her eyes, but it was shaken off angrily Then she was fetched by Elizabeth, who had from the high cheek bones, and never settled been given a whole afternoon's holiday; and into absolute crying. They thought it best to mistress and maid went together home, watch-take no notice of her. Culy, when reaching ing the last of the festivities, the chattering the new, small station, where the "resonant groups that still lingered in the twilight streets, steam eagles" were, for the first time, beheld and listening to the merry notes of the "Tri-by the innocent Stowbury ladies, there arose a discussion as to the manner of traveling, fear, toward her eldest sister, who looked so Miss Leaf said, decidedly "Secondolass; and old and fragile beside that sturdy, healthful then we can keep Elizabeth with us." Upon servant girl. "Elizabeth!" Elizabeth, rubwhich Elizabeth's mouth melted into some bing Miss Leaf's feet, started at the unwonted thing between a quiver and a smile.

"# i mi az a stone."

Soon it was all over, and the little house- I'll do that for my sister. Go and look out of hold was compressed into the humble second the window at London." class carriage, cheerless and cushionless, out, could find no spot of comfort to rest on hear, within the carriage, except that round rosy in face of Elizabeth Hand's.

tion existing in most such natures, which, estible in time " pecially in youth, are more strong than sweet. Miss Selina now began to fidget hither and able seat for Miss Leaf. thither, each tone of her fretful voice seeming him just five minutes more, Hilary." to go through her eldest sister's every nerve. to the surface immediately.

ary often remembered aderward how much came Ascott. more comfortable the end of the journey was most unconsciously, into new destinies. Hil- tell cabby to drive to?" ary, for the first time, began to doubt of theirs. "Where to?" repeated his aunts in undis-sharpness of Miss Hilary's tone. "There;

For the great smoky cloud which began to whirling through indefinite England in a way rise in the rainy horizon was indeed London. that confounded all their geography and to Soon through the thickening nebula of houses pography. Gradually as the day darkened they converged to what was then the nucleus into heavy, chilly July rain, the scarcely kept of all railway traveling, the Euston Terminus, up sprits of the four passengers began to sink, and were hustled on to the platform, and Johanna grew very white and worn. Selina jostled helplessly to and fro these poor counbecame, to use Ascott's phrase, "as cross as try ladies! Anxiously they scanned the crowd two sticks," and even Hilary, turning her eyes of strange faces for the one only face they know from the gray sodden looking landscape within the great metropolis—which did not ap-

"It is very strange: very wrong of Ascott. Hilary, you surely told him the hour Whether it was from the spirit of contradic-correctly. For once, at least, he might have

So chafed Miss Selina, while Elizabeth, who or from a better feeling, the fact was noticea-ble, that when every one else's spirits went had encessed in collecting the luggers, was down Elizabeth's went up.: Nothing could had succeeded in collecting the luggage, was bring her out of a "grumpy" fit so satisfactorily as her mistresses falling into one. When especially porters, and making of it a comfort

" Nay, have patience, Selina. We will give till even Hilary said, impatiently, "Oh. Seli- And Johanna sat down, with her sweet, na, can't you be quiet?" then Elizabeth rose calm, long suffering face turned upward to that from the depth of her gloomy discontent up younger one, which was, as youth is apt to be, hot, and worried, and angry. And so they She was only a servant; but Nature bestows waited till the terminus was almost deserted, that strange vague thing that we term "force and the last cab had driven off, when, sudden-of character" independently of position. Hilly, dashing up the station yard out of another,

He was so sorry, so very sorry, downright than she had expected—how Johanna lay at grieved, at having kept his aunts waiting. But ease, with her feet in Elizabeth's lap, wrapped his watch was wrong-some fellows at dinner in Elizabeth's best woolen shawl: and how, detained him—the train was before its time when Selina's whole attention was turned to surely. In fact, his aunts never quite made an ingenious contrivance with a towel and fork out what the excuse was: but they looked into and Elizabeth's basket, for stopping the rain his bright handsome face, and their wrath ont of the carriage roof-she became far less melted like clouds before the sun. He was so disagreeable, and even a little proud of her gentlemanly, so well dressed-much better own eleverness. And so there was a tempor dressed than even at Stowbury—and he seemed rary lull in Hilary's cares, and she could sit so unteignedly glad to see them. He banded quiet, with her eyes fixed on the rainy land-them all into the cab-even Elizabeth. though scape, which she did not see, and her thoughts whispering meanwhile to his Aunt Hilary. wandering toward that unknown place and "What on earth did you bring her for ?" and unknown life into which they were sweeping, then was just going to leap on to the box himas we all sweep, ignorantly, unresistingly, al-self, when he stopped to ask "Where he should

Anxious as she had been to go to London, and guised astonishment. They had never thought wise as the proceeding appeared, now that the of any thing but of being taken home at once die was east and the cable cut, the old simple, by their boy:

peaceful life at Stowbury grew strangely dear. "You see," Ascott said, in a little confusion, "I wonder if we shall ever go back again, or "you wouldn't be comfortable with me. A what is to happen to us before we do go back," young fellow's lodgings are not like a house of she thought, and turned, with a half defined one's own, and, besides-"

"Besides, when a young fellow is ashamed it:" which was the one only thing she condeof his old aunts, he can easily find reasons." | seended to approve in London. She had sat

"My dear boy, your old aunts would never let would not send her away into the terra incogyou inconvenience yourself for them. Take nita of a London hotel. Ascort, at first conus to an inn for the night, and to morrow we siderably annoyed at the presence of what he will find lodgings for ourselves."

Ascott looked greatl; relieved.

Johanna?" said he, with something of his old his plans and intentions-how he meant to childish tone of compunction, as he saw-he take a house, he thought, in one of the squares, could not help seeing—the utter wearings or a street leading out of them; how he would which Johanna tried so hard to hide. which Johanna tried so hard to hide.

had known this a little sooner that we might practice, and have all his aunts to live with have made arrangements. Now, where shall him. And his aunts had smiled and listened.

found he only knew them by name. At last also listened. Miss Leaf remembered one, which her father "Elizabeth, come and look out at Lonused to go to, on his frequent journeys toldon." London, and whence, indeed, he had been So she and Miss Hilary whiled away anbrought home to die. And though all the other heavy three quarters of an hour in watchrecollections about it were sad enough, still it ing and commenting on the incessantly shiftfelt less strange than the rest, in this drearmessing crowd which swept past Holborn Bars. of London. So she proposed going to the "Old Miss Selma sometimes looked out too, but Bell," Holborn.

All right. Drive on, eabby."

mischievously, flourishing his lit eigar, and her something not paintfully new, but still shaking his long hair—his Aunt Selina's two more painfully old—a look branded into her great abominations—right in her indignant face by many an anxious hour's listening for face: but withal looking so merry and good the footstep that never came, or only came to tempered that she shortly softened into a bring distress. It was the inclinecable token smile.

"How handsome the boy is growing!"

"and did you notice? how exceedingly like ion, had been the appointed burden of this

The sentence was left unfinished. Alas! if times it seemed to hang over them almost like every young man, who believes his faults and a fate. follies injure himself alone, could feel what it! About noon Miss Leaf proposed calling for must be, years afterward, to have his nearest the hotel bill. Its length so alarmed the coun-that the lad is growing "so like his father!" ings.

that it was—only the incessant roll, roll of I always understood ladies could go nowhere the street sounds below their windows, which in London without a gentleman!" cast a slight shadow over them all. Still the once?" shadow was there.

It deepened despite the sunshing morning "No, dear, I'll take the mainto which the last night's rain Lad brightened. Elizabeth. She is not afraid."

"Hush, Selma!" interposed Miss Leaf, all evening mute in her corner, for Miss Leaf called a "skeleton at the feast," had afterward got over it, and run on with a mixture of "And you are not vexed with me, Aunt childish glee and mannish pomposity about put up the biggest of brass plates, with "Mr. "No, my dear, not vexed. Only I wish we Leaf, surgeon," and soon get an extensive forgetting all about the silent figure in the Ascott mentioned a dozen hotels, but they corner, who perhaps had gone to sleep, or had more often sat fidgeting and wondering why "A capital place!" exclaimed Ascott, ea Ascott did not come: while Miss Leaf, who gerly. "And I'll take and settle you there: never fidgeted. became gradually more and and we'll order supper, and make a jolly night more silent. Her eyes were fixed on the door, with an expression which, if Hilary could have He jumped on the box, and then looked in remembered so far back, would have been to of that long, long struggle between affection land conscience, pary and scarcely repressible "Yes," said Johanna, with a slight sigh : contempt, which, for more than one generakindred shrink from saying, as the suddest, try ladies that Hilary suggested not staying to most ominous thing they could say of his son, dine, but going immediately in search of lodg-family-at least the women of it-till some-

It might have been—they assured each other "What, without a gentleman! Impossible!, kept the Misses Leaf awake half the night of "We shall come very ill off then, Selina. this their first night in London. And when But any how I mean to try. You know the they sat down to breakfast—having waited an region where, we have heard, lodgings are hour vainly for their nephew-it might have cheapest and best-that is, best for us. It can been only the gloom of the little parlor which not be far from here. Suppose I start at

> "What, alone?" cried Johanna, anxiously. " No, dear, I'll take the map with me, and till Hollorn Bars looked cheerful, and Hol- Elizabeth smiled, and rose, with that air of born pavement actually clean, so that, as Eli-dogged devotedness with which she would have zabeth said, "you might eat your dinner off prepared to follow Miss Hilary to the North Pole, if necessary. So, after a few minutes of arguing with Selina, who did not press her Such thoughts made her step firmer and point overmuch, since she herself had not to her heart lighter; so that she hardly noticed commit the impropriety of the expedition. the distance they must have walked till the After a few minutes more of hopeless lingering close London air began to oppress her, and about-till even Miss Leaf said they had b to the smooth glaring London pavements made ter wait no longer-mistress and maid took a her Stowbury feet ache sorely. farewell nearly as pathetic as if they had been "Are you tired, Elizabeth? really Arctic voyagers, and blunged right into rest soon. There must be lodgings near here. the dusty glare and harrying crowd of the Only I can't quite make out-"sunny side" of Holborn in July.

thing exhibarating in it. The intense solitude into her mistress's face, pale and tired as it that there is in a London crowd these country was. Just then a church clock struck the girls-for Miss Hilary herself was no more quarter hour. than a girl-could not as yet realize. They only felt the life of it; stirring, active, incestyes, this is Burton Street, Burton Crescent." santly moving life; even though it was of s "I'm sure Missis wouldn't like to live kind that they knew as little of it as the crowd there," observed Elizabeth, eveing uneasily did of them. Nothing struck Hilary more the gloomy rez de chaussee, familiar to many a than the self-absorbed look of passers by generation of struggling respectability, where, each so busy on his own affairs, that, in spite in the decadence of the season, every second of Selina's alarm, for all notice taken of them, house bore the announcement "apartments they might as well be walking among the cows furnished." and horses in Stowbury field.

"That's London ways, I suppose," said she,

ally, she knew by heart-glad to find herself which he had sometimes jestingly alluded to, in the body, where in the spirit she had come as coming upon him at times, when he felt so many a time. The mere consciousness of literally sick for the sight of a green field or a this seemed to refresh her. She thought she bedge full of birds. She wondered whether would be much happier, in London: that in the same feeling would ever come upon her in the long years to come that must be borne, it this strange desert of London, the vastness of would be good for her to have something to do which grew upon her every hour. as well as to hope for: something to fight | She was glad he was away; yes, heart glad! with as well as to endure. Now more than And yet, if this minute she could only have ever came pulsing in and out of her memory seen him coming round the Crescent, have a line once repeated in her hearing, with an met his smile, and the firm, warm clasp of observation of how "true" it was. And though his handoriginally it was applied by a man to a woman, For an instant there rose up in her one of and she smiled sometimes to think how "un-those wild, rebellious outcries against fate, feminine" some people-Selina for instance- when to have to waste years of this brief life would consider her turning it the other way, of ours, in the sort of semi-existence that living still she did so. She believed that, for woman is, apart from the treasure of the heart and as for man, that is the purest and noblest love delight of the eyes, seems so cruelly, cruelly which is the most self-existent, most indepen-hard! pendent of love returned; and which can say, each to the other equally on both sides, that the whole soleinn purpose of life is, under key" immediately. God's service.

"If not to win, to feel more worthy thee."

As Miss Hilary looked up to the name of A strange sensation, and yet there was some the street the maid noticed what a glow came

"That must be St. Pancras. And this-

"No," Miss Hilary replied, absently. Yet Poor old Stowbury! They felt how far she continued to walk up and down the whole away they were from it when a ragged, dirty, length of the street; then passed out into the vicious looking girl offered them a moss rose dreary, deserted looking Crescent, where the bud for "one penny, only one penny;" which trees were already beginning to fade; not, Elizabeth, lagging behind, bought, and found however, into the bright autumn tint of counit only a broken off bud stuck on to a bit of try woods, but into a premature withering, ugly and sad to behold.

"I am glad he is not here—glad, glad!" severely, and became so misanthropic that she thought Hilary, as she realized the unutterawould hardly vouchsafe a glance to the hand-ble dreariness of those years when Robert some square they turned into, and merely ob Lyon lived and studied in his garret from served of the tall houses, taller than any month's end to month's end—these few dusty. Hilary had ever seen, that she "wouldn't trees being the sole memento of the green fancy running up and down them stairs." country life in which he had been brought up, But Hilary was cheerful in spue of all. She and which she knew he so passionately loved. was glad to be in this region, which, theoretic- Now she could understand that "calenture"

"Miss Hilary."

She started, and "put herself under lock and

"Miss Hilary; you do look so tired!".

"Do I? Then we will go and sit down in we will find out Mr. Ascott's number, and this baker's shop, and get rested and fed. We inquire."

We have a great deal to do to-day."

walked up one street and down another, inves- "Where had he gone to?" as body after a day's wandering in London, fine. Hilary's courage began to obb. Oh for an arm "Yes, Mr. Leaf had gone, and he hadn't there are two of us!" And she yearned, with Praps he would if he'd known there would be an absolutely sick yearning such as only a a young lady a calling to see him." woman who now and then feels the utter help- "I am Mr. Leaf's aunt," said Hilary, turnlessness of her womanhood can know, for theting as hot as fire. only arm she cared to lean on, the only voice! "Oh, in-deed," was the answer, with civil dear enough to bring her comfort, the only incredulousness. heart that she telt she could trust.

entirely and devotedly, to the end of her days to praises of her late lodger: what a pleasant did he forsake her, she would forgive him gentleman he was: what good company he should be die, she would be faithful to him kept, and how he had promised to recommend eternally. Love of this kind may know an her apartments to his friends. guish, but not the sort of anguish that lesser . " And as for the little some at of rem, Miss and weaker loves do. If it is certain of no- -tell him it makes no matter, he can pay me thing else, it can always be certain of itself.

"Tra will is strong: It suffers: but it can not suffer love."

And even in its utmost pangs is an underlying peace which often approaches to alcolnte jov.

steadily on lodgings till she discovered one leave him all his money. Maybe a relation of from the parlor of which you could see the yours. Missi trees of Burton Crescent and hour the sound of Saint Paneras's clock.

while," said she cheerfully; and then Eliza-abeth lokowing. both heard her inquiring if an extra bedroom - "Won't you be tired if you walk so fast. could be last if necessary.

There was only one small attic. "Ascott, never could put up with that," sail Hilary, looked up and down the forforn, wide, glaring. half to herself. Then suidenly-"I think I dusty screet; now sinking into the dull shadow will see Ascort before I decide. Elizabeth, or a London afternoon. will you go with me, or remain here?"

"H' you please," sounded not unlike, "H I strength in crying. please," and Elizabeth had gloomed over a " As you say, Elizabeth, I am getting tired: little. "Is Mr. Ascott to live with us?"

" I suppose so."

reached Gower street, when Miss Hilary ob will go back and take the lodgings, leave you served, with evident surprise, what a hand-there to make all comfortable, and then fetch some street it was.

"I must have made some mistake. Still have forgotten something."

cannot afford to wear ourselves out, you know. No, there was no mistake, Mr. Ascott Leaf had lodged there for three months, but More indeed than she calculated, for they had given up his rooms that very morning.

tigating at least twenty lodgings before any The servant-a London lodging house servappeared which seemed fit for them. Yet ant all over-didn't know; but she fetched the some place must be found where Johanna's landlady, who was after the same pattern of the poor, tired head could rest that night. At last, dozen London landladies with whom Hilary completely exhausted, with that oppossive had that day made acquaintance, only a little exhaustion which seems to crush mind as well more t'ockney, smirking, dirty, and tawdrily to lean on, a voice to listen for, a brave heart left no address. Young College gentlemen to come to her side, saying, "Do not be afraid, often found it convenient to leave no address.

But the woman was sharp of perception-as Poor Hilary! And yet why pity her? To often-cheated London landladies learn to be, her three alternatives could but happen: were After looking keenly at mistress and maid, she Robert Lyon true to her she would be his changed her tone: nay, even lannched out in-when he likes. If he don't call soon, p'raps I might make hold to send his trunk and his books ever to Mr. Ascott's of-dear me. I forget the number and the square."

Illiary unsusticiously supplied both.

"Yes, that's it—the old gen'leman as Mr. Leat went to dine with every other Sundar, a Hilary roused herself, and bent her mind very rich old gentleman, who, he says, is to "No." said Hilary: and adding something about the handledv's hearing from Mr. Leat "I think we may do here—at least for a very soun, she burried out of the house. Eliz-

Mi - Hilam :

Hilary stopped, choking. Helplessly she

"Let us go home!" And at the word a sob-"I'll go with you, if you please, Miss Hill burst out-just one passionate pent up sob. No more. She could not afford to waste and that will not do. Let me see; something must be decided." And she stood still, pass-No more words were interchanged till they ing her hand over her hot brow and eyes. "I my sisters from the hotel. But stay first, I

She returned to the house in Gower Street, pulsive as they are. Unless, indeed, their and wrote on one of her cards an address-the talent for incessant locomotion degenerates only permanent address she could think of- into rootless restlessness, and they remain forthat of the city broker who was in the habit of ever rolling stones, gathering no moss, and paying them their yearly income of £50. Jacquiring gradually a smooth, hard surface,

"If any creditors inquire for Mr. Leaf, give which adheres to nothing, and to which no-them this. His friends may always hear of body dare venture to adhere.

him at the Londen University." "Thank you, ma'am," replied the now civil degree this said quality of adhesiveness, to landlady. "Indeed, I wasn't atraid of the whom the smallest change is obnoxious; who young gentleman giving us the slip. For like drinking out of a particular cup, and sitthough he was careless in his bills he was ting in a particular chair; to whom even a every inch the gentleman. And I wouldn't variation in the position of furniture is unobject to take him in again. Or p'raps you pleasant. Of course, this peculiarity has its yourself, ma'am, might be a-wanting rooms." bad side, and yet it is not in itself mean or zabeth to her, till they got into the dull, dingy is it not the same feeling which, granting they parlor-henceforth, to be their sole apology remain at all, makes old friendships dearer domestic arrangements—talked fast and ea-lest and closest bond, is it not that which makes gerly, and tried to escape the affectionate eyes an old man see to the last in his old wife's which she knew were so sharp and keen faded face the beauty which perhaps nobody Only to escape them—not to blind them; she ever saw except himself, but which he sees quick-witted for that, especially in any thing miliar and his own. that concerned "the family." She felt convinced the girl had heard every syllable that rare—shall I say fatal?—characteristic of adpassed at Ascott's lodgings: that she knew all hesiveness, living in lodgings is about the sadto be feared as well as Hilary herself.

Hilary hurried away.

about-about-'

She could not name Ascott: she felt so horribly ashamed.

CHAPTER X.

permanently, sitting down to make one's only bought with her own money to grace the tea-"home" in Mrs. Jones's parlor or Mrs. Smith's table with the only fruit Miss Leaf cared for, first floor, of which not a stick or a stone that had turned out a large delusion, big and beauone looks at is one's own, and whence one may tiful at top, and all below small, crushed, and be evicted or evade, with a week's notice or a stale. She had thrown it indignantly, pottle week's rent, any day-this sort of life is natu and all, into the kitchen fire. derives from them, active, energetic, and im-impression upon the country girl, accustomed

But there are others possessing in a painful "No, I thank you. Good morning." And ignoble. For is not adhesiveness, faithfulness, constancy—call it what you will—at the root

Not a word did she say to Elizabeth, or Eli-of all citizenship, clanship, and family love? for "home:" and then she only talked about than any new? Nay, to go to the very sacredhad long ago found out that Elizabeth was too and delights in still, simply because it is ta-

To people who possess a large share of this that was to be known, and guessed what was dest life under the sun. Whether some dim foreboding of this fact crossed Elizabeth's mind "Elizabeth"—she hesitated long, and doubt- as she stood at the window watching for her ed whether she should say the thing before mistresses' first arrival at "home," it is imshe did say it—"remember we are all strang-possible to say. She could feel, though she ers in London, and family matters are best was not accustomed to analyze her feelings, kept within the family. Do not mention But she looked dull and sad. Not cross, even either in writing home, or to any body here, Ascott could not have accused her of "savageness."

And yet she had been somewhat tried. First. in going out what she termed "marketing," she had traversed a waste of streets, got lost several times, and returned with light weight in her butter, and sand in her moist sugar; also with the conviction that London tradesmen were the greatest rogues alive—Second-LIVING in lodgings, not temporarily, but ly, a pottle of strawberries, which she had ral and even delightful to some people. There Thirdly, she had a war with the landlady. are those who, like strawberry plants, are of partly on the subject of their fire--which, with such an errant disposition, that grow them her Stonbury notions on the subject of coals, where you will, they will soon absorb all the secured wretchedly mean and small—and partpleasantness of their habitat, and begin casting by on the question of table cloths at tea, which out runners elsewhere; nay, if not frequently Mrs. Jones had "never heard of," especially transplanted, would actually wither and die, when the use of plate and linen was included Of such are the pioneers of society—the cuit in the rent. And the dinginess of the article grants, the tourists, the travelers round the produced at last out of an omnium-gatherum world: and great is the advantage the world sort of kitchen cupboard, made an ominous to clean, tidy, country ways—where the kitch-to the door; the "family" had at length aren was kept as neat as the parlor, and the rived. bedrooms were not a whit behind the sitting Ascott was there too. Two new portmanrooms in comfort and orderliness. Here it teaus and a splendid hat-box east either ignoseemed as if, supposing people could show a miny or glory upon the poor Stowbury luggage; tew respectable living rooms, they were content and Elizabeth's sharp eye poticed—there to sleep any where, and cook any how, out of was also his trunk which she had seen lying any thing, in the midst of any quantity of con-detained for reut in his Gower Street lodgings. fusion and dirt. Elizabeth set all this down But he looked quite easy and comfortable; as "London," and hated it accordingly.

and rearranging the furniture—regular lodg, such a magnificent air, that they to iched their ing house furniture—table, six chairs, horse, hats to him, and winked at one another as hair sofa, a what-not, and the chiffonnier, with much as to say, "That's a real gentleman!" a tea-eaddy upon it. of which the respective In which statement the landlady evidently derminster on the floor, gave an involuntary Leaf's, while she and Hilary took that at the sense of discomfort and dreariness. Besides, top of the house. But they agreed, Ascott No. 15 was on the shady side of the street must have a good airy room to study in. cheap lodgings always are: and no one who "You know, my dear boy," said his Aunt has not lived in the like lodgings—not a house Johanna to him—and at her tender tone he—can imagine what it is to inhabit perpetu-looked a little downcast, as when he was a ally one recommendate. ally one room where the sunshine just peeps small fellow and had been forgiven something in for an hour a day, and vanishes by eleven a. "You know you will have to work very M.: leaving behind in winter a chill dampness, hard." and in summer a heavy, dusty atmosphere, that "All right, aunt! I'm your man for that! weighs like lead on the spirits in spite of one's This will be a jolly room: and I can smoke self. No wonder that, as is statistically known up the chimney capitally !" and proved, cholera stalks, fever rages, and shady side of a London street.

er!—Fine new pease, sixpence peck!"

ness and the dullness of every thing about her pale and tired, but smiling will-to her bed--what is so dull as a "quiet" London street room door. on a summer evening?-actually made Eliza- "You'll not sit up long, my dear? beth stand, motionless and meditative, for a reading to night?" said she, anxiously, quarter of an hour.

Then she started to hear two cabs drive up the lark to-morrow morning. I really will, handed out his Aunt Johanna, commanded She had tried to ease her mind by arranging the lnggage about, and paid the cabmen with keys had been solemnly presented to Miss coincided and courtesied low when Miss Leaf Hilary. But still the parlor looked homeless introducing him as "my nephew," hoped that and bare; and the yellowish paper on the a room could be found for him. Which at walls, the large patterned, many colored Kid. last there was, by his appropriating Miss

-"All right, aunt! I'm your man for that!

So they came down stairs quite cheerfully, the registrar's list is always swelled along the and Ascott applied himself with the best of appetites to what he called a "hungry" tea. Elizabeth felt this, though she had not the dimmest idea why. She stood watching the sunset light fade out of the topmost windows of the opposite house—ghostly reflection of some sunset over fields and trees far away; and she listened to the long monotonous ery melting away round the crescent, and beginning again at the other end of the street—"Straw-berries—straw-ber-ries!" Also, with an eye to tomorrow's Sunday dinner, she investigated the cart of the tired costermonger, who crawled or rather was driven, a pleasant home, and to or rather was driven, a pleasant home, and to True, the ham, which Elizabeth had to fetch cart of the tired costermonger, who crawled bind him to it with cords of love, the only along beside his equally tired donkey, reiterateords worth any thing, though sometimes bawling, his dreary "Cauli-flower! Cauli-flow Snapped and thrown aside like example. snapped and thrown aside like straws.

Whenever Elizabeth went in and out of the But, alas! the pease were neither fine nor parlor she always heard lively talk going on new; and the canliflowers were regular Satur among the family: Ascott making his jokes. day night's cauliflowers. Besides. Elizabeth telling about his college life, and planning his suddenly doubted whether she had any right dife to come, as a surgeon in full practice, on unordered, to buy these things which, from be the most extensive scale. And when she ing common garden necessaries, had become brought in the chamber candles, she saw him duxuries. This thought, with some others kiss his aunts affectionately, and even help that it occasioned, her unwonted state of idle his Aunt Johanna-who looked frightfully

"Not a bit of it. And Ill be up with

I'm going to turn over a new leaf, a laugh. auntie. you know."

She smiled again at the immemorial joke, on her and Hilary.

self on the sofa with an air of great relief, and a young man who could not pay his rent had an exclamation of satisfaction that "the wo-no business to be giving away half-crowns; men" were all gone. He did not perceive or else she herself had not been so much as Elizabeth, who, hidden behind, was kneeling many servants are, in the habit of taking them. to arrange something in the chiffonnier, till For Miss Hilary had put into Elizabeth some she rose up and proceeded to fasten the parlor of her own feeling as to this habit of paying understand. Any how, don't stop here, both-round again.

like."

ering me."

ly, rather than gruffly, as if she had made up them any thing about the latch-key." her mind to things as they were, and was de | Elizabeth stood a minute perplexed, and termined to be a belligerent party no longer then replied briefly: "Miss Hilary isn't a bit Besides, she was older now; too old to have timid; and I always tells Miss Hilary every things for given to her that might be overlooked thing." in a child; and she had received a long lecture head of the family.

more to-night?"

"Confound you! no! Yes; stop." the plain, honest face, and not over graceful ultra-provincial figure, which still characterized his aunt's "South Sea Islander."

"I say, Elizabeth, I want you to do something for me." He spoke so civilly, almost tresses were sad: that she had only to go coaxingly, that Elizabeth turned round surprised. "Would you just go and ask the no interest in any thing. I can only answer landlady if she has got such thing as a latch-to those who like such service, let them have kev?"

'A what, Sir?"

"A latch-key--a--oh, she knows. London house has it. Tell her I'll take care bed, Johanna and Hilary Leaf, after a brief of it, and lock the front door all right. She mutual pretence of sleep, soon discovered by peedn't be afraid of thieves."

"Very well, Sir."

the information that Mrs. Jones had gone to rent, possibly be met by the only actual cerbed; in the kitchen, she supposed, as she tain family income, their £50 per annum from could not get in. But she laid on the table a mortgage? For the Misses Leaf were or the large street door key.

Though I think you needn't be the least afraid ther insanity or dishonesty. of robbers, for there's three bolts, and a chan-besides."

"All right!" cried Ascott, smothering down they must soon draw on the little sum-al-

"Thank you! That's for you," throwing a half-crown across the table.

Elizabeth took it up demurely, and put it kissed and blessed him, and the door shut up down again. Perhaps she did not like him enough to receive presents from him; perhaps Ascott descended to the parlor, threw him she thought, being an honest minded girl, that an interior with money for any little civility or "Hollo! are you there? Come. I'll do that kindness which, from an equal, would be acwhen I go to bed. You may 'slope' if you cepted simply as kindness, and only requited with thanks, Any how, the coin remained on the table, and the door was just shutting upon "Slope, mizzle, cut your stick: don't you Elizabeth, when the young gentleman turned

"I say, since my aunts are so horridly timid "I don't mean to," replied Elizabeth: grave-of robbers and such like, you'd better not tell Nevertheless, though she was so ignorant from Miss Hilary on the necessity of showing as never to have heard of a latch-key, she had respect to Mr. Ascott, or Mr. Leaf, as it was the wit to see that all was not right. She even now decided he was to be called, in his dignilar awake, in her closet off Miss Leaf's room, ty and responsibility as the only masculine whence she could hear the murmur of her two mistresses talking together, long after they re-As he lay and lounged there, with his eyes tired—lay broad awake for an hour or more, lazily shut, Elizabeth stood a minute gazing trying to put things together-the sad things at him. Then, steadfast in her new good be-that she felt certain must have happened that havior, she inquired "if he wanted any thing day, and wondering what Mr. Ascott could cossibly want with the key. Also, why he And had asked her about it, instead of telling his the young man took a furtive investigation of limits at once; and why he had treated her in the matter with such astonishing civility.

> It may be said a servant had no business to think about these things, to criticize her young master's proceedings, or wonder why her misabout her work like an automaton, and take it: and as they sow they will assuredly reap.

But long after Elizabeth, young and hearty, Every was soundly snoring on her hard, cramped both, lay consulting together over wavs and means. How could the family expenses, be-Elizabeth went, but shortly reappeared with ginning with twenty-five shillings per week as that old-tashioned stamp which believed that "Perhaps that's what you wanted. Mr. Leaf to reckon an income by mere probabilities is > Common arithmetic soon proved that this 250 a year could not maintain them; in fact had been produced by the sale of the Stowbury tellow of his age was the stay and bread winfurniture. That sale, they now found had nor of some widowed mother or sister, nay, been a mistake: and they half feared whether even of wife and child, still she repeated cheerthe whole change from Stowbury to London fully. "What can one expect from him? He had not been a mistake—one of those sad er is only a boy. rors in judgment which we all commit some- God help the women who, for those belongtimes, and have to abide by, and make the ing to them -hurbands, fathers, brothers, lovbest of, and learn from if we can. Happy ers, sons-have ever so tenderly to apologize. those who "Dinna greet ower spilt milk"—a When they came in sight of St. Paneras's proverb wise as cheerful, which Hilary, know- Church, Ascott said, suddenly, "I think you'll ing well who it came from, repeated to Johan-know your way now. Aunt Hilary.' na to comfort her-teaches a second brave "Cercainly. Why? lesson, how to avoid spilling the milk a second " Because on wouldn't be vexed it I left what was to be done to earn inonev.

source. In those days women's work and capital for one's health to get a Sunday in women's rights had not been discussed so free aresh air. ly as at present. There was a strong lealing that the principal thing required was our du-miss you." ties-owed to ourselves, our home. our family and friends. There was a deep conviction - Stay! Tell her I shall be back to tea.' now, alas! slowly disappearing -- that a woman, single or married, should never throw ing how to expend its income, cook its dinners, prettiest auntie. Be sure you get home safe, make and mend its clothes, and, by the law that "prevention is better than cure," studying all those preservative means of holding a family together—as women, and women alone, with one of those strange sinkings of the heart can-than to dash into men's sphere of trades which had come over her several times this and the compensations of neither.

can do but teach. And oh, it I could only get wrong. It made her sad : it caused her to look daily pupils, so that I might come home or forward to his future with an anxious heart. nights, and ereep into the fireside; and have It was so different from the kind of anxiety, time to mend the stockings and look after As and yet settled repose, with which she thought travagant."

CHAPTER XL

Aunt Hilary fixed her honest eyes on the ry. She could but leave it in Omnipotent tad's face -- the lad. so little younger than her hands. all, he was but a boy. And though as he knew the fact, and it did nobody any harm walked by her side, stalwart and manly, the Meantime at No 15 the afternoon had pass-ready dipped into to-day, for Ascott-which thought smote her painfully that many a young you? There an cagagement : some tellows And then they consulted auxiously about that I dine with, out at Hampstead, or Richhat was to be done to earn money. Mothing Teaching presented itself as the only re wicked, I assure you. And you know it's

"Yes; but Annt Johanna will be sorry to

" Will she? Oh, you'll smooth her down.

"We shall be having tea directly."

"I deciare I had quite forgotten. Aunt Hilherself out of the safe circle of domestic life ary, you must change your hours. They till the last extremity of necessity; that it is don't suit me at all. No men can ever stand wiser to keep or help to keep a home, by learn-early dinners. By, by! You are the very and professions, thereby, in most instances, lay. It was not that Ascott showed any unfighting an unequal battle, and coming out of kindness-that there was any actual badness it maimed, broken, unsexed: turned into be- in his bright and handsome young face. Still ings that are neither men nor women, with there was a want there-want of earnestness, the faults and corresponding sufferings of both, steadfastness, truthfulness, a something more idiscoverable as the lack of something else than "I don't see." said poor Hilary, "what I as aught in itself tangibly and perceptibly cott's linen, that he need not be so awfully ex- of the only other man in whose future she felt the smallest interest. Of Robert Lyon, she was certain that whatever misfortune visited him he would bear it in the best way it could be borne; whatever temptation assailed him he would fight against it as a brave and good Christian should fight. But Ascott?

Ascott's life was as yet an unanswered que-self, and yet who at times, when he let out. So she found her way home, asking it once sayings such as this, seemed so avifully, so or twice of civil policemen, and going a little pitifully old; and sle felt thankful that at all distance round-dare I make this romantic risks and costs, they had come to London to confession about so sensible and practical a be beside him, to help him, to save him, if he little woman?-that she might walk once up needed saving, as women only can. For, after Burton Street and down again. But nobody ed heavily enough. Miss Selina had gone toltice boy, now Mr. Peter Ascott, of Russell lie down: she always did of Sundays, and Square.

Elizabeth, after making her comfortable, by She rose to receive him: there was always the little attentions the lady always required, a stateliness in Miss Leaf's reception of stranhad descended to the dreary wash house, which gers: a slight formality belonging to her own had been appropriated to herself, under the past generation, and to the time when the name of a "private kitchen," in the which, Leafs were a "county family." Perhaps this after all the cleanings and improvements she extra dignity, graceful as it was, overpowered could achieve, sat like Marius among the ruins the little man; or else, being a bachelor, he of Carthage, and sighed for the tidy bright was unaccustomed to ladies' society: but he house place at Stowbury. Already, from her grew red in the face, twiddled his hat, and brief experience; she had decided that London then east a sharp inquisitive glance toward people were horrid shams, because they did her. not in the least care to have their kitchens "Miss Leaf, I presume, ma'am. The eldcomfortable. She wondered how she should est?" ever exist in this one, and might have carried . "I am the eldest Miss Leaf, and very glad her sad and sullen face up stairs, if Miss Leat to have an opportunity of thanking you for had not come down stairs, and glancing about your long kindness to my nephew. Elizabeth, with that ever gentle smile of hers, said kind-give Mr. Ascott a chair." ly, "Well, it is not very pleasant, but you While doing so, and before her disappearhave made the best of it, Elizabeth. We must ance, Elizabeth took a rapid observation of the all put up with something, you know. Now, visitor, whose name and history were perfectly as my eyes are not very good to-day, suppose familiar to her. Most small towns have their you come up and read me a chapter."

that Beak which says distinctly:

whether he be bond or free."

And yet says immediately after:

"Ye musters, to the same things and them, but, when asked, as was not seldom of course, forbearing threatening: knowing that your Mass he subscribed liberally to its charities.

persons with him."

His word, as only He can teach.

driving up to the door, and a knock, a tre-teresting individual it was about whom Stowmendously grand and foreible tootman's bury had told so many interesting stories. knock, which made Miss Leaf start in her easy chair.

"But it can't be visitors to us.

nobody. Sit still, Elizabeth."

It was a visitor, however, though by what pected. ingenuity he found them out remained, when' they came to think of it, a great puzzle. A cott became quite at his ease with Miss Leaf. card was sent in by the dirty servant of Mrs. He began to talk—not of Stowbury, that was Jones, speedily followed by a stout, bald tacitly ignored by both—but of London, and headed, round faced man-I suppose I ought then of "my house in Russell Square, "my to write "gentleman"—in whom, though she carriage," "my servants"—the inconvenience had not seen him for years, Miss Leaf found of keeping coachmen who would drink, and no difficulty in recognizing the grocer's pren-footmen who would not clean the plate prop-ou come up and read me a chapter." hero, and Stowbury's was Peter Ascott, the So, in the quiet parlor, the maid sat down grocer's boy, the little fellow who had gone up opposite her mistress, and read aloud out of to London to seek his fortune, and had, strange to say, found it. Whether by industry or "Screants, be obtained to them that are year luck except that industry is luck, and luck is masters according to the flesh, with fear and only another word for industry—he had gradtrembling, in singleness of heart, as unto (Wrist; mally risen to be a large city merchant, a dryknowing. That whatsaccer good thing any man salter I conclude it would be called, with a docth, the same shall be receive of the Bord, trandsome house, carriage, etc. He had never reviewd his native place, which indeed could whom he expected of him, as he had no relations, ter also is in heaven: neither is there respect of Altogether he was a decided hero in the place, and though people really knew very And I think that Master whom Paul serv-little about him, the less they knew the more ed, not in preaching only, but also in practice, they gossiped, holding him up to the rising genwhen he sent back the slave Onesimus to Phil- eration as a modern Dick Whittington, and emon, praying that he might be received, "not reverencing him extremely as one who had now as a servant, but above a servant, a bro-shed glory on his native town. Even Elizather beloved." that Divine Master must have both had conceived a great idea of Mr. Ascott. looked tenderly upon these two women-both When she saw this little fat man, coarse and women, though of such different age and po-common looking in spite of his good clothes sition, and taught them through His Spirit in and diamond ring, and in manner a curious mixture of pomposity and awkwardness, she The reading was disturbed by a carriage laughed to herself, thinking what a very unin-

> However, she went up to inform Miss Selina, and prevent her making her appearance We know before him in the usual Sunday dishabille in which she indulged when no visitors were ex-

After his first awkwardness, Mr. Peter Aserly; ending by what was a favorite moral then into his hat, then, as good luck would axiom of his, that "wealth and position are have it, out of the window, where he caught sight of his carriage and horses. These reviheavy responsibilities."

He himself seemed, however, not to have ved his spirits, and made him recognize what been quite overwhelmed by them; he was fat he was-Mr. Ascott, of Russell Square, adand flourishing-with an acuteness and power dressing humself in the character of a benevoin the upper half of his face which accounted lent patron to the Leaf family.

for his having attained his present position. "Glad to see you. Miss. Long time since The lower half, somehow Miss Leat did not we met—neither of us so young as we have like it, she hardly knew why, though a phys been—but you do wear well, I must say." iognomist might have known. For Peter Miss Selina drew back; she was within an Ascott had the underhanging, obstinate, sen- inch of being highly offended, when she too sual lip, the large throat—bull-necked, as it happened to catch a glumpse of the carriage has been called—indications of that essentially and horses. So she sat down and entered into animal nature which may be born with the conversation with him; and when she liked, nob'eman as with the clown; which no edn nobody could be more polite and agreeable cation can refine, and no talent, though it may than Miss Selina.

co-eqist with it, can ever entirely remove. He So it happened that the handsome equipage reminded one, perforce, of the rough old prove crawled round and round the Crescent, or stood erb; "You can't make a silk purse out of a pawing the silent Sunday street before No. 15, sow's ear."

Still, Mr. Ascott was not a bad man, though home. -made it impossible for him ever to be, by lad till midnight, or till to-morrow morning. any culture whatever, a gentleman.

convenient mutual subject; and Miss Leaf no one could say he was not civil to themexpressed the gratitude which her nephew felt, exceedingly civil. He offered them Botanical and she earnestly hoped would ever show, to Garden tickets-Zoological Garden tickets; ward his kind godfather.

Mr. Ascott looke liplensed.

lieve he means well: but weak, ma'am, I'm Russell Square the following Sanday. afraid he's weak. Knows nothing of business. "I always give my dinners on Sunday. -has no business habits whatever. Howeveno time any other day," said he, when Miss er, we must make the best of him: I don't Leaf gently hesitated. "Come or not, just as repent any thing I've done for him.'

"I hope not," said Miss Leaf, gravely.

And then there ensued an nucomfortable addressed, bowed the most gracious acceptpause, which was happily broken by the open-ance. ing of the door, and the sweeping in of a large,! The visitor took very little notice of Miss goolly figure.

as he bowed, blushed up to the eves.

rate, she was not faded enough, nor the city to him.

for very nearly an hour, even till Hilary came something deeper than his glorious indiffer. It was vexations to have to make excuses ence to grammar, and his dropped his-which, for Ascott: particularly as his godfather said to steal some one's joke, might have been with a laugh, that "young fellows would be swept up in bushels from Miss Leaf's parlor young fellows," they needn't expect to see the But though in this, and other things, he

They taked of Ascott, as being the most somewhat annoved the ladies from Stowbury, he even, after some meditation and knitting of his shaggy grey eyebrows, bolied out with "Um-yes, Ascort's not a bad fellow-be-an invitation for the whole family to dinner at you like."

Miss Selina, to whom the remark was chiefly

Hilary. Probably, if asked, he would have "My sister, Mr. Ascott: my sister Selina." described her as a small, shabbily-dressed per-The little stout man actually started, and, son, looking very like a governess. Indeed, the fact of her governess-ship seemed suddenly Miss Solina was, as I have stated, the beauty to recur to him; he asked her it she meant of the family, and had once been an acknowly to set up another school, and being informed edg d Stowbury belle. Even now, though night that she rather wished private pupils, proupon forty, when carefully and becomingly mised largely that she should have the full dressed, her tall figure, and her well featured, benefit of his "patronage" among his friends. fair complexioned, unwrinkled tace, made her Then he departed, leaving a message for Asstill appear a very personable woman. At any cott to call next day, as he wished to speak magnate's heart cold enough to prevent a sud-: "For you must be aware, Miss Leaf, that den revival of the vision which—in what now though your nephew's allowance is nothingseemed an almost anteddingian stage of exist a mere drop in the backet out of my large inence—had dazzled, Sunday after Sunday, the come—still, when it comes year after year, eyes of the grocer's lad. If there is one pure and no chance of his shifting for himself, the spot in a man's heart-even the very worldli- most benevolent man in the world feels inest of men-it is usually his boyish first love, clined to stop the supplies. Not that I shall young fellow, whom I'm rather proud to have childish fits of irrepressible laughter, was helped a step up the ladder, and I've a great startled to see Selina's face in one blaze of respect' -here he bowed to Miss Selina-"a indignation. great respect for your family. Still there must "Hold your tongue, you silly chit, and don't come a time when I shall be obliged to shut up chatter about things you don't understand."

So Peter Ascott looked hard at Miss Selina, do that—at least not immediately: he is a fine

my purse-strings. You understand, ma'am."

And she swept majestically out of the room.

with dignity, and yet with patience, for she vexed. It'l had thought she would have taken saw Hilary's face beginning to flame. "And it in earnest I would never have said a word. I trust, Mr. Ascott, my nephew will soon cease Who would have thought it!" to be an expense to you. It was your own But Miss Selina's fits of annoyance were so voluntary kindness that brought it upon your-|common that the sisters rarely troubled themselt, and I hope you have not found, never will selves long on the matter. And when at reafind, either him or us ungrateful."

gratitude. Still, if Ascott does work his way for these brief calms in the family atmosphere, into a good position—and he'll be the first of which never lasted too long. his family that ever did, I reckon—but I beg It was a somewhat heavy your pardon, Miss Leaf. Ladies, I'll bid you waited supper till after ten; and yet Ascott did

riage?"

The instant he was gone Hilary burst no sign of the absentee.

dependent on this man, this pompous, purse possibly be.

proud, illiterate fool!"

we were to hate every thing coarse or common made her a thousand apologies. think how very, very kind he has been to how tired she looks!" and he kissed her at-Ascott."

word for the de'il himself, as we used to say, \ over-persuaded you." cried Hilary, laughing. "Well, Selina; and what is your opin:on of our stout triend?"

Miss Selina, bridling a little, declared that were as good as my Aunt Hilary." she did not see so much to complain of in Mr. Ascott. He was not educated, certainly, but he was a most respectable person. And his calling upon them so soon was most civil and attentive. She thought, considering his present position, they should forget—indeed. with him next Sunday.

my duty towards my neighbor."

sure, Selina, I have no objection. It would be gayeties, live forlors in London lodgings, and a grand ron antic wind up to the story which knowing nobody, have nobody to visit, nobody Stowbury naed to tell-of how the 'prentice to visit them. boy stared his eyes out at the beautiful young | Except Mr. Ascott, who still called, and oclady; and you would get the advantage of easienally staid to tea. The hospitalities. 'my house in Russell Square,' 'my carriage however, wer all on their side. The first enand servante,' and be able to elevate your tertainment—to which Selina insisted upon whole family. Do, now! art your cap at going, and Johanna thought Hilary and Ascott Peter Ascott."

"I do," Miss Leaf answered, trying to speak "What have I done? Why she is really time she came down in the best of spirits, they "Oh, as to that, ma'am, I don't look for met her half way, as they always did; thankful

It was a somewhat heavy evening. good day. Will your servant call my car-not appear. Miss Leaf read the chapter as usual; and Elizabeth was sent to bed, but still

"I will sit up for him. He cannot be many "If I were Ascott, I'd rather starve in a minutes new," said his Annt Hilary, and setgarret, break stones in the high road, or buy tled herself in the solitary parlor, which one a broom and sweep a crossing, than I'd be candle and no fire made as cheerless as could

There she waited till midnight before the "No. not a fool," reproved Johanna. "An young man came in. Perhaps he was struck acute, clear-headed, nor. I think, had-hearted with compunction by her weary white faceman. Coarse and common, certainly; but if by her silent lighting of his candle, for he

we should find plenty to hate. Besides, though "'Pon my honor, Aunt Hilary, I'll never he does his kindness in an unpleasant way, keep you up so late again. Poor dear auntie, fectionately. "But if you were a young fellow, "Johanna, I think you would find a good and got among other young fellows, and they

"You should learn to say, No."

"Ah"-with a sigh-"so I ought, if I

CHAPTER XII.

MONTHS slipped by; the trees in Burton as Christians they were bound to forget-that Crescent had long been all bare; the summer he was once their grocer's boy, and go to dine cries of itinerant vegetable dealers and flower sellers had vanished out of the quiet street.— - "For my part, I shall go, though it is The three sisters almost missed them, sitting Sunday. I consider it quite a religious duty-in that one dull parlor from morning till night, in the intense solitude of people who, "Which is to love him as yourself. I am having neither heart nor money to spend in had better go too-was aplendid enough, but

Here Hilary, breaking out into one of her they were the only ladies present; and though

Mr- Ascott did the honors with great magnifi-'passeth all understanding," was a living comcence, putting Miss Selina at the head of his ment on the truth of these words. table, where she looked exceedingly well, still Another comfort Hilary had-Elizabeth. the sisters agreed it was better that all further During her long days of absence, wandering invitations to Russell Square should be de-from one end of London to the other, after clined. Miss Selina herself said it would be advertisements that she had answered, or govmore dignified and decorous.

offered to bring any of his friends; and grade in ads of Editabeth. It was she who bought nally they saw very little of him. He was in, and kept a jealous eye, not unneeded, over frequently out, especially at meal times, so provisions; she who cooked and waited, and that his aunts gave up the struggle to make sometimes even put a helping hand, coarse, the humble dinners better and more to his but willing, into the family sewing and mendliking, and would even have hesitated to take mg. This had now become so vital a necessity the movey which he was understood to pay that it was fortunate Miss Leaf had no other tor his board, had be ever offered it, which he occupation, and Miss Selina no other enteralid not. Yet still whenever he did happen tainment, than stitch, stitch, stitch, at the to remain with them a day, or an evening, he ever-beginning, never-ending wardrobe wants was good and affectionate, and always enter-which assail decent poverty every where, estained them with descriptions of all he would pecially in London. do as soon as he got into practice.

as possible upon the little ready money they her oldest gown, to suit a damp, foggy day, had, hoping that more would come in-that when the streets were slippery with the mud knows London this will not be surmising .- shop in Southampton Row," insinuated Eliz-The wonder was in the Misses Leaf being so aboth: but her mistress shook her head. simple as to imagine that a young country la- "No, no; my old black sit, will do capitally, dy, settling berself in lodgings in an obscure and I can easily put on two shawls. Nobody metropolitan street, without friends or intro-knows me; and people may wear what they duction, could ever expect such a thing. No-like in London. Don't look so grave, Elizathing but her own daring, and the irrepressi- beth. What does it signify if I can but keep ble well-spring of hope that was in her healthy myself warm? Now, run away." youth, could have sustained her in what, ten Elizabeth obeyed, but shortly reappeared years after, would have appeared to her, as it with a bundle-a large, old fashioned thick certainly was, downright insanity. But shawl. Heaven takes care of the mad, the righteensly and unselfishly mad, and Reaven took care her: but we've pover worn it, and never shall. of poor Hilary.

Hilary would get pupils.

she ran, the pitfalls she escaped-what need was no re-isting them. One natural pang like, many more have known them, and see fallen so low as to be indebted to her servant. fades before reality. Hilary never looked that could not at once receive it as such, back upon that time herself without a shudst "Than" you. Elizabeth," she said, gravely dering wonder how she could have dared all and gently, and let herself be wrapped in the and gone through all. Possibly she never thick shawl. Its gargeous reds and yellows could, but for the sweet old face, growing older would, she knew, make her noticeable, even yet sweeter every day, which smited upon her though " people might wear any thing in Lonthe minute she opened the door of that dull don." Still, she put it on with a good grace. parlor, and made even No. 15 look like home and all through her peregrinations that day it with burning, bursting tears, the tale of her Coming home, she paused wistfully before a day's efforts and May's failures, it was always glittering shoe shop; her poor little feet were comfort to feel Johanna's hand on her hair, so soaked and cold. Could she possibly afford Johanna's voice whispering over her, "Never a new pair of boots? It was not a matter of mind, my child, all will come right in time, vanity-she had passed that. She did not All happens for good."

crness institutions that she had applied to the Other visitors they had none. Ascott never domestic affairs fell almost entirely into the "Clothes seem to wear out frightfully fast," Meantime they kept house as economically add Hilary one day, when she was putting on of settled rain.

But Hilary never did. To any body who "I saw such beautiful merino dresses in a "Mother gave it me: her mistress gave it poor Hilary.

If o if you ado't mind parting it on, just this The hundred labors she went through—once—tak terrible scaling day!"

weariness of body and travail of soul, the risks. The carlet face, the entreating cones—there to record here? Many have recorded the Hilary felt—that in her sharp povert, she had knowledged that when such histories are re and then she too blushed, less for shame at produced in books how utterly imagination occuping the kindness than for her own pride care now how ugly and shabby looked the And the face, withered and worn, yet calm as a summer sea, full of the "peace which she felt it might be a matter of health and prudence. Suppose she caught cold—fell ill/She neve; thought of being annoyed with the alone: died before Robert Lyon came home, the sixpence, carefully took down her name Both thoughts struck sharp. She was too and address: still less to suspecting the old young still, or had not suffered enough, calmly lady opposite, who sat and listened to the to think of death and dving.

When she told, sometimes gayly, sometimes, varined not only her shoulders, but her heart:

"It will do no harm to inquire the price.

might stop it out in omnibuses."

For this was the way that every new article her. She herself never despised any body, of dress had to be procured-"stopping it except for wickedness.

out" of something else. bitter blush at a small hole which the day's but with her mind quietly occupied by the two walking had worn in her well-darned stock-thoughts, which in any brief space of rest alings, and which she was sure the shopman ways recurred, calming down all annoyances, boots. The bill overstepped her purse by six fluence of these her tired face grew composed, single day.

struggles so small, of sufferings so uninterest-become suddenly interested. ing and mean. I paint it not because it is There is no accounting for these interests, how best to save here and spend there, which Providence which narrows a woman's nature in spite of herself? It sometimes takes years of comparative ease and freedom from pecuniary cares to counteract the grinding, lowering effects of a youth of When Hilary left the shop she was startled toverty.

And I paint this picture, too, literally, and not on its picturesque side—it, indeed, poverty Southampton Row, would you object to give has a picturesque side-in order to show an lan old woman a share of that capital umbrella other side which it really has-high, heroic, of yours?" made up of dauntless endurance, self sacrifice. "With pleasure," Hilary answered, though and self-control. Also, to indicate that bless, the oddness of the request amused her. And ing which narrow circumstances alone bestow, it was granted really with pleasure; for the the habit of looking more to the realities than old lady spoke with those "accents of the to the shows of things, and of finding pleas-mountain tongue' which this foolish Hilary ure in enjoyments mental rather than sensuous, never recognized without a thrill at the heart. can truly recognize this they cease either to be take a cab, and not be intruding upon strang-afraid or ashamed of poverty.

Hilary was not ashamed:—not even now a street's length from my own door, I dislike when hers smote sharper and harder than it to waste unnecessary shillings." had ever done at Stowbury. She felt it a sore "Certainly," acquiesced Hilary, with a half thing enough; but it never humiliated nor an-sigh: shillings were only too precious to her. gered her. Either she was too proud or not "I saw you in the boot shop, and you proud enough; but her low estate always seemed the sort of young lady who would do a seemed to her too simply external a thing to kindness to an old body like me; so I said to affect her relations with the world outside. myself, 'Ill ask her.'"

-died: died, leaving Johanna to struggle shopkeeper, who, though he trusted her with transaction-apparently a well-to-docustomer, I'clad in a rich black silk and handsome sable furs—of looking down upon her and despising

So she waited contentedly, neither thinking After trying several pairs—with a fierce, of herself, nor of what others thought of her: saw, as well as an old lady who sat opposite and raising her above the level of petty pains -Hilary bought the plainest and stoutest of -Johanna and Robert Lyon. Under the in-Lence, but she promised that sum on delivery, and there was a wishful, far away, fond look and paid the rest. She had got into a nervous in her eyes, which made it not wonderful that horror of letting any account stand over for a the said old lady-apparently an acute old soul in her way—should watch her, as we do occa-Look tenderly, reader, on this picture of sionally watch strangers in whom we have original, but because it is so awfully true or to the events to which they give rise. Thousands of women, well born, well reared, Sometimes they are pool-pool-ed as "roman-know it to be true—burned into them by the tic," "unnatural," "like a bit in a novel:" cruel conflict of their youth; happy they if it and yet they are facts continually occurring, ended in their youth, while mind and body especially to people of quick intuition, observhad still enough vitality and elasticity to enation, and sympathy. Nay, even the most dure! I paint it, because it accounts for the ordinary people have known or heard of such, accusation sometimes made—especially by resulting in mysterious, life-long loves; firm men—that women are naturally stingy. Posfiriendships; strange vet often wonderful hapsibly so; but in many instances may it not py marriages; sudden revolutions of fortune have been this petty struggle with petty wants, and destiny: things utterly unaccountable this pititul calculating of penny against penny. for, except by the belief in the unscrutable > "Shapes ou rends. Rough-hew them as we will,"

by a voice at her elbow.

"I beg your pardon, but if your way lies up inward rather than external. When people "May be you think an old woman ought to ers; but I am hale and hearty, and being only able to show a kindings to any body.

but she said nothing of this, concluding, of learned about the Leaf family. course, that her companion was unaware of Nevertheless, owing to Selina's indignant where she lived; in which she was mistaken, pertinacity, Hilary's own hesitation, and a dim They stopped at last before a respectable hope of a pupil which rose up and taded like house near Brunswick Square, bearing a brass the rest, the possible acquaintance lay dormant plate, with the words "Miss Balquidder."

droukit."

"I shall take no harm. I am used to go out come from. in all weathers."

"Are you a governess?" The question was a penny!" gasped Hilary. so direct and kindly, that it hardly seemed an impertinence.

shall never get any.

"Why not?"

"I suppose, because I know nobody here, spent, would hardly have been sadder. It seems so very hard to get teaching in London. But I beg your pardon."

"I beg yours," said Miss Balquidder-not without a certain dignity-" for asking questions of a stranger. But I was once a strangeled one another, cried a little, and then sat er here myself, and hall a 'sair feelit,' as we down to consider what was to be done. say in Scotland, before I could earn even my daily bread. Though I wasn't a governess, them. Hitherto they had not troubled him still I know pretty well what the sort of life much with their affairs: indeed, he was so is, and if I had daughters who must work for little at home. And after some private contheir bread, the one thing I would urge upon sultation, both Johanna and Hilary decided them should be-"Never become a govern-that it was wisest to let the lad come and go with all your wet clothes on; but as I said, it en ladies felt that with men, and, above all,

"Indeed. For what reason?"

you will do me the favor to call-" initiated in London caution to dread making a their utmost that home should be always a new acquaintance. Besides, she liked the pleasant home. rough hewn, good natured face; and the Scotch accent was sweet to her ear.

shy of telling her sisters the engagement she hanna put away her mending, and Selina had made. Selina was extremely shocked ceased to grumble, and Hilary began her and considered it quite necessary that the lively chat, that never failed to brighten and London Directory, the nearest clergyman, or, amuse the household. Her nephew even perhaps, Mr. Ascott, who living in the parish sometimes acknowledged that wherever he must know-should be consulted as to Miss went, he met nobody so "clever" as Aunt Balquidder's respectability.

"She has much more reason to question ours." recollected Hillary, with some amuse on this night, after the rest were gone to bed, ment; for I never sold her my name or ad-she, being always the boldest to do any undress. She does not know a single thing about pleasant thing, said to him,

Which fact, arguing the matter energetic gressing? When do you think you will be ally two days after, the young lady might not able to get into practice?" have been so sure of, could she have penetrated the ceiling overhead. In truth, Miss Bal-

"I am glad you did." Poor girl! she felt quidder, a prudent person, who never did unconsciously please l at finding herself still things by halves, and, like most truly generous people, was cautions even in her extremest They walked on and on-it was certainly a fits of generosity, at that very moment was long street's length-to the stranger's door, sitting in Mrs. Jones's first floor, deliberately and it took Hilary a good way round from hers: discovering every single thing possible to be for two or three weeks; till, alas! the tabulous "That is my name, and very much obliged wolf actually came to the door; and the sisto you, my dear. How it rains! Ye're just ters, after paying their week's rent, looked aghast at one another, not knowing where in Hilary smiled and shook her damp shawl the wide world the next week's rent was to

"Thank God, we don't owe any thing: not

"No; there is comfort in that," said Johan-And the expression of her folded hands "Yes; but I have no pupils, and I fear I and upward face was not despairing, even though that of the poor widow, when her barrel of meal was gone, and her cruse of oil

> "I am sure we have wasted nothing, and cheated nobody;—surely God will help us."

"I know He will, my child."

And the two sisters, elder and younger, kiss-as he liked; not attempting—as he once indignantly expressed it—" to tie him to their "I'll not tell you now, my dear, standing apron strings." For instinctively these maidyoung men, the only way to bind the wander-"Thank you!" said Hilary, not sufficiently ing heart was to leave it free, except by trying

It was touching to see their efforts, when Accord came in of evenings, to enliven for Yet when she reached home she was half his sake the dull parlor at No. 15. How Jo-

Hilary.

So, presuming upon her influence with him,

"Ascott, how are your business affairs pro-

"Oh, presently. There's no hurry."

"I am not so sure of that. Do you know, my dear boy"-and she opened her purse, meant no harm. She repeated over and over which contained a few shillings—"this is all again that the lad meant no harm.

the money we have in the world."

beg your pardon," he added, seeing it was with fashion; but was no more to be relied on than her no langhing matter; "but I am so accus- a straw that every wind blows hither and tomed to be hard up that I don't seem to care, thither; or, to use a common simile, a butter-It always comes right somehow --at least with fly that never sees any thing farther than the me.

" How ?"

women, who, if their boy, instead of a fine or a sentimental theory, or an impossible folly. gentleman, had been a helpless invalid, would, Poor lad! and he had the world to fight have tended him, worked for him, nay, begged with; how would it use him? Even if no for him-cheerfully, oh, how cheerfully! want- heavy sorrows for himself or others smote him, ing nothing in the whole world but his love— his handsome face would have to grow old, they could not ask him for his money. Even his strong frame to meet sickness—death. now, offered thus, Hilary felt as if to take it How would be do it? That is the thought would be intolerable.

Still the thing must be done.

to say what somebody ought to say to him—houses, debtors' prisons and lunatic asylums. "I wish you would not lend but pay us the pound a week you said you could so easily happily it was as yet too far off-Hilary had spare."

fellow I have been! But-but-I fancied you him to-night seemed to make them darken would have asked me if you wanted it. Nev-down upon her with added gloom. As she er mind, you'll get it all in a lump. Let me went up stairs she set her lips together hard. see-how much will it come to? You are the best head going for arithmetic, Aunt Hilary, cept me. But I must not tell Johanna." Do reckon it all up?"

open his eyes wide.

much. I'm very sorry, but I seem fairly an idea that came out of a talk she had had cleaned out this quarter-only a few sovereigns with Elizabeth that morning. True, it was a left to keep the mill going. You shall have perfectly new and untried chance—and a mere them, or half of them, and I'll owe you the chance; still it was right to overlook nothing. rest. Here !"

tour or five pounds. Hilary took two. asking said—finding her as wakeful as herself—said him gravely "If he was sure he could spare it in a careless manner, as if it had relation to so much? She did not wish to inconvenience nothing, and she expected nothing from it him."

did; you have been good aunts to me."

He kissed her, with a sudden fit of compunction, and hade her good-night, looking as if he did not care to be "bothered" any more.

Hilary retired, more sad, more hopeless about him than if he had slammed the door in her face, or scolded her like a trooper. Had he met her seriousness in the same spirit, one, handsomely furnished, and a neat little even though it had been a sullen or angry maid-servant showed Hilary at once into the no evil ways; was always pleasant, good-"Nonsense," said Ascott, laughing. "I natured, and affectionate, in his own careless nearest flower. His was, in short, the pleasure-loving temperament, not positively sinful "Oh, I don't exactly know; but it does or sensual, but still holding pleasure as the Don't fret, Aunt Hilary. I'll lend you a pound greatest good; and regarding what deeper or two." and find therein their She drew back. These poor, proud. fond strong-hold and consolation, as a mere bugbear which always recurs. What is the end of such men as these? Alas! the answer would come "I wish, Ascott"-and she nerved herself from hospital wards, alms-houses and work-

To apprehensions like this—except the last, are." heen slowly and sadly arriving about Ascott "To be sure I will. What a thoughtless for weeks past; and her conversation with

"I see there is nobody to do any thing ex-

She lay long awake, planning every con-She did so; and the sum total made Ascott ceivable scheme for saving money; till at tlength, her wits sharpened by the desperation "Upon my soul I had no idea it was so of the circumstances, there flashed upon her She would not have ventured to tell Selina of He emptied on the table, without counting, it for the world, and even to Johanna, she only

"I think, as I have nothing else to do, ! "Oh, not at all: and I wouldn't mind if it will go and see Miss Balquidder to-morrow morning."

CHAPTER XIII.

Miss Balquibber's house was a handsome spirit—and little as she said be must have felt dining-parlor, where the mistress sat before a she wished him to feel-that his aunts were business-like writing-table, covered with letdispleased with him; but that utterly unim-ters, papers, etc., all arranged with that careful pressible light-heartedness of his—there was other in disorder which indicates, even in the no doing any thing with it. There was so to smallest things, the possession of an accurate, speak, "no catching hold" of Ascott He methodical mind, than which there are fer greater possessions, either to its owner or toleyes filling, in spite of all her self-command.

the world at large.

and age had told its tale upon those large, rook the wine from the side-board, poured some strong features—"thoroughly Scotch features," out for herself and Hilary, and began to talk. they would have been called by those who "It is nearly my huncheon-time, and I am think all Scotchwomen are necessarily big, a great friend to regular eating and drinking. raw-boned, and ugly; and have never seen I never let any thing interfere with my own that wonderfully noble beauty—not prettiness, meals, or other folks' either, if I can help it. out actual beauty in its highest physical as I would as soon expect that fire to keep itself well as spiritual development—which is not up without coals, as my mind to go on workseldom found across the Tweed.

was nothing unpleasant or uncomely in Miss Miss Leat. I hope you are a prudent girl, Balquidder. Her large figure, in its plain and take care of it." black silk dress; her nest white cap, from 'I think I do;" and Hilary smiled.

daxen hair, neither gray nor snowy, but real abeth."

"lint-white locks" still; and her good-humor- "Ah, I liked the look of that girl. If fam-She was a "constortable" woman. She had always judge my new acquaintances." that quality-too rarely, alas! in all people. "There's reason in it, too," said Hilary. the same.

Hilary was cheered in spice of herself: it with here and there a Scotch word.

had forgotten your promise.

to the hearty clasp of a hand large as a man's, warm at the heart, and capable of warming a but soft as a woman's.

"Why did you not come sooner?"

More than one possible excuse flashed thro' Robert Lyon had it in perfection. Like a waft Hulary's mind, but she was too honest to give as from old times, it made Hilary at once feel it. She gave none at all. Nor did she like at home with Miss Balquidder. to leave the impression that this was merely a | Equally, Miss Balquidder might have seen visit, when she knew she had only come from something in this gurl's patient, heroic, forlorn secondary and personal motives.

Because I want advice and help, and I think there is often a hidden something beneath vou vesterday.

"Indeed! From whom?"

Pears, who told our maid-servant your house? I beg your pardon, but I know thousands more of helpless young women!wher you live, Miss Leaf: your landlady "I want work!" asoper to be an acquaintance of mine."

every day: but there was something new in who look a great interest in helping other the telling of it; such extreme directness and scenes and in money?—blushing searlet at simplicity, such after want of either false pride the ides-"I don't mean that, but in procur- or false shame. No asking of favors, and yet ing them work. I want work—oh! so terribly, no shrinking from well-meant kindness; the If you only knew-" resulting much, her voice breaking, and her and never supposing for an instant that mere

Miss Balquidder—who seemed accustomed Miss Balquidder was not a personable we to wait upon herself—went out of the room, man; she had never been so even in youth; and returned with cake and glasses; then she ling if I don't look after my body. You nn-

But while there was nothing lovely, there derstand? You seem to have good health, under which peeped the little round curls of any rate my sister does for mc, and also Elized, motherly look—motherly rather than old-lines did but know that the most useful patent maidish-gave an impression which may be of respectability they can carry about with best described by the word "comfortable."—them is their maid-servant! That is how I and rarest in women going solitary down the amused and drawn out of herself by the frank hill of life-of being able, out of the deep con-manner and the cordial voice-I use the adjectent of her own nature, to make other people tive advisedly; none the less sweet because its good terse English had a decided Scotch accent, always conveys hope to the young, when in there was about Miss Balquidder a certain dry sore trouble, if they see the old looking happy, humor essentially Scotch-neither Irish "wit" "Welcome, my dear! I was afraid you nor English "fun," but Scotch humor; a Hittle ponderous perhaps, yet sparkling: like "Oh no," said Hilary, responding heartily the sparkles from a large lump of coal, red-> whole household. As many a time it had warmed the little household at Stowbury-for wouth which reminded her of her own. "May I tell you why I came to-day !-- reasoning as these sudden attractions appear, you cai, give it, from something I heard about which in reality makes them both natural and probable, as was the case here. In half an thour these two women were sitting talking like " In rather a roundabout way; from Mrs old friends; and Hilary had explained her present position, needs and desires. "The same girl I met on the strivense at ended in the one cry-familiar to how many

Miss Balquidder listened thoughtfully. Not that it was a new story-alas! she heard it poor woman speaking freely to the rich one,

"Sit down, my dear;" for Hilary was recognizing the common womanhood of both, between them.

character of both, to the practical application serve in a shop—to wait upon strangers—I am of it-what it was exactly that Ifilary needed, so horribly shy of strangers." And again the and what Miss Balquidder could supply.

The latter said, after a turn or two up and cheeks and forehead. down the room, with her hands behind her-the only masculine trick she had--

"My dear, before going further, I ought to tell you one thing--1 am not a lady."

laughing, "not an educated gentlewoman like If they did we might not have so many cases you. I made my money myself—in trade. I of proud despair and ambitious failure in the kept an outfitter's shop.

was the involuntary reply, which, in its ex and then tear your hair, and think the world treme honesty and naivete, was perhaps the has ill-used you-very grand, but very silly; best thing that Hilary could have said.

der laughed her hearty laugh, betraying one the world will be exceedingly obliged to you of her few weaknesses -- a consciousness of her for doing it, and not doing the other thing.own capabilities as a woman of business, and As doubtless the world was to me, when, infor, so far as I see, a good clearance of one houses in London."

keeping a shop?"

It is no reflection upon Hilary to confess dilate upon it in easy old age. the richest tradesman who "keeps a shop," She applied her mind to find out what she and the poorest lawyer doctor, or clergyman could best do with herself and her money. who ever starved in decent gentility. It had "I might have bought a landed estate to be been often a struggle for Hilary Leaf's girlish inherited by-nobody; or a house in Belgrapride to have to teach A B C to little boys and via, and an opera-box, to be shared by-nogirls whose parents stood behind counters; body. We all have our pet luquries; none of but as she grew older she grew wiser, and in-these were exactly mine." tercourse with Robert Lyon had taught her "No," assented Hilary, somewhat abstractbut I really never heard." Nevertheless it reality, which side the money came from; dices of years, nay, more of generations. In deepest attachment, when a proud, poor man spite of her will Hilary felt herself whice, and had self-respect and courage enough to say to the color rush all over her face, at Miss Bal- a woman, "I love you, and I will marry you; quidder's question.

"Take time to answer, and speak out, my gold." ar. Don't be afraid. You'll not offend But, dear.

cover her balance immediately.

"I never thought of it before; the possibil-haps, her own appeared hard. But she had money or position could make any difference ity of such a thing did not occur to me; but I hope I should not be ashamed of any honest The story ended, both turned, as was the work for which I was competent. Only- to sensitive color rushed in a perfect tide over passionately at her.

Miss Balquidder looked, half amused, com-

" No, my dear, you would not make a good shop-woman, at least there are many who are Hilary looked at her in no little bewilder better fitted for it than you; and it is my maxim that people should try to find out, and "That is," explained Miss Balquidder, to do, only that which they are best fitted for. world. It looks very grand and interesting "You must have kept it uncommonly well," sometimes to try and do what you can't dc, when all the while, perhaps, there is some-"Well, perhaps I did," and Miss Balquid-thing else you can do thoroughly well; and a pleasure at her own deserved success. | stead of being a mediocre musician, as I once "Therefore, you see, I can not help you as a wished to be—it's true, my dear--I took to governess. Perhaps I would not if I could, keeping one of the best ladies' outfitting ware-half the governesses into honest trades would While she talked her companion had quite be for their own benefit, and greatly to the recovered herself, and Miss Balquidder then benefit of the other half. But that's not my went on to explain, what I will tell more affair. I only meddle with things I under briefly, if less graphically, than the good stand. Miss Leaf, would you be ashamed of Scotchwoman, who, like all who have had a hard struggle in their youth, liked a little to that this point-blank question startled her .- Hard as it was, however, it had ended early, Her bringing up had been strictly among the for at fifty she found herself a woman of indeprofessional class; and in the provinces sharper pendent property, without kith or kin, still than even in London is drawn the line between active, energetic, and capable of enjoying life.

much. She never forgot one day, when Seli-edly. She was thinking-if she could make a na asked him something about his grandfath- fortune, and -and give it away!-if, by any er or great-grandfather, and he answer lueans, any honorable, upright heart could be quickly, smiling, "Well, I suppose I had one, made to understand that it did not signify, in takes long to conquer entirely the class preju-that it sometimes showed deeper, the very l am not such a coward as to be afraid of your

But, oh! what a ridiculous dream!—and she sat there, the penniless Hilary Leaf, list-The kindly cheerful tone made Hilary re-lening to Miss Balquidder, the rich lady, whose life seemed so easy. For the moment, perhope, and she was young. She knew nothing I find more difficult to get done, and well of the years and years that had had to be lived done, for it requires a far higher class of wothrough before those kind eyes looked as clear men than generally apply: you could keep and cloudless as now; before the voice had the accounts of a shop; you should be the gained the sweet evenness of tone which she head, and it would be easy to find the hands. liked to listen to, and felt that it made her Let me see; there is a young lady, she has quiet and "good," almost like Johanna's. managed my stationer's business at Kensing-"You see, my dear," said Miss Balquidder, ton these two years, and now she is going to

"when one has no duties, one must just be married. Are you good at figures; do you make them; when we have nobody to care understand book-keeping?" for us, we must take to caring for every body. And suddenly changing into the woman of I suppose "-here a slight pause indicated that business, and one who was evidently quite this life, like all women's lives, had had its accustomed both to arrange and command, tale, now long, long told-"I suppose I was Miss Balquidder put Hilary through a sort of not meant to be a wife; but I am quite cer-extempore arithmetical catechism, from which tain I was meant to be a mother. And "- she came off with flying colors. with her peculiar, bright, humorous look- "I only wish there were more like you. I what lots of 'children' I have in all parts of like-" the world."

Miss Balquidder then went on to explain, I always used to say that was my case. that finding, from her own experience, how "No, I never desire to see young women great was the number, and how sore the trial, made into men." And Miss Balquidder seemof young women who nowadays are obliged ed a little scandalized. "But I do wish girls to work-obliged to forget that there is such were taught fewer accomplishments, and more a thing as the blessed priviledge of being work-reading, writing, and arithmetic; were made ed for—she had set herself, in her small way, as accurate, orderly, and able to help themto try and help them. Her pet project was to selves as hove are. But to business. induce educated women to quit the genteel you take the management of my stationer's starvation of governesships for some good shop?" trade, thereby bringing higher intelligence in- Hilary's breath came hard and fast. Much to a class which needed, not the elevation of as she had longed for work, to get this sort of the work itself, which was comparatively easy work—to keep a stationer's shop? What and refined, but of the workers. She had would her sisters say? what would he say? therefore invested sum after sum of her capi-But she dared not think of that just now. tal in setting up various small shops in the "How much should I be able to earn, do environs of London, in her own former line. you think?" and others-stationers, lace-shops, etc.-trades' Miss Balquidder considered a moment, and which could be well carried on by women .-- then said, rather shortly, for it was not exact-Into the management of these she put as ma-ly acting on her own principles; she knew the ny young girls as she could find really fitted pay was above the work. "I will give you a for it, or willing to learn, paying them regular hundred a year." salaries, large or small, according to their de- A hundred a year! actually certain, and

"Fair work, fair pay; not one penny more a fortune to poor Hilary. or less; I never do it; it would not be honest. I overlook each business myself, and it is about it and consult my sisters?" carried on in my name. Sometimes it brings: me in a little profit; sometimes not. course," she added, smiling. "I would rather dently struggled with many feelings that have profits than losses; still, I balance one would be best struggled with alone. The good against the other, and it leaves me generally a small interest for my money—two or three old lady rose. per cent., which is all I care about. Thus, you see, I and my young people make a fair keep the situation open for you for one week bargain on both sides; it's no charity. I don't from this date. And now I must send you abelieve in charity."

She was yet young enough, yet enough un-went out, walking quickly, feeling neither the worn by the fight to feel the deliciousness of wind nor the rain. Yet when she reached work-honest work for honest pay. 'I think No. 15 she could not bring herself to enter,

"At all events, perhaps you could do what before she opened the matter to her sisters.—

" you'd be astonished, Miss Leat, if you knew wish there were more young ladies brought up

"Like-boys!" said Hilary, laughing, "for over and above any other income. It seemed

"Will you give me a day or two to think

She spoke quietly, but Miss Balquidder Of could see how agitated she was; how she evi-

"Take your own time, my dear; I will way, for I have a great deal to do."

"No," said Hilary, feeling her spirit rise. They parted, quite like friends; and Hilary I could do it," she added. "I think, with a but took another turn or two round the Crestittle practice, I really could keep a shop." cent, trying to be quite sure of her own mind which the sisters did know.

It was perhaps foolish, seeing she did not long as persistency is right or possible. belong to him in any open way, and he had "Robert, Robert!" sobbed this forlorn girl, no external right over her life or lier actions, as if slowly waking up to a sense of her forthat she should go back and back to the ques-lorness, and of the almost universal fickleness, tion, "What would Robert Lyon say?"

but it must be done; and when a thing was ful to me!" inevitable, it was not Mr. Lyon's way to say much about it. But being a governess was an accredited and customary mode of a young lady's earning her livelihood. This was different. If he should think it too public, too unfeminine: he had such a horror of a woman's brave as she could, but in a womanly way; deserted. doing any thing, however painful, that she was | Miss Leaf had gone to lie down, and Miss obliged to do, but never out of choice or bra-Selina was away to see the Lord Mayor's Show vado, or the excitement of stepping out of her with Mr. Peter Ascott. own sphere into man's. Would Robert Lyon "With Mr. Peter Ascott!" Hilary was a things? That old order—God forbid it should pressibly galling. ever change!—which ordained that the women ner, I suppose?" should be "keepers at home;" happy rulers of that happy little world, which seemed as far off as the next world from this poor Hilary. Would have noticed something not quite right from what he expected?" And bitter tears "What is the matter, Elizabeth?" For Miss a revulsion came.

would not be worth my having: I'd let it go. Queen on her throne. Robert, though it broke my heart, I'd let you go."

a half reproach, she heard in fancy the steady time in her life, she had not "told Miss Hila-loving voice—which could have calmed her ry every thing." Two things had happened.

must trust me, Hilary."

Yes, he was a man to be trusted. No doubt very much like other men, and by no means a very tender one, and which, from circumsuch a hero to the world at large as this fond stances, had been cultivated into a much highgirl made him out to be: but Robert Lyon er sensitiveness than, alas! is common among had, with all people, and under all circum-her class, or, indeed, in any class. This, if an stances, the character of reliableness. He had error, was Miss Hilary's doing; it probably also-you might read it in his tace-a quality caused Elizabeth a few more iniseries, and equally rare, faithfulness. Not merely sin-vexations, and painful shocks in the world cerity, but faithfulness; the power of conceiv-than she would have had had she imbibed oning one clear purpose, or one strong love—in ly the ordinary tone of morality, especially the unity of strength—and of not only keeping morality of ordinary domestic servants; but true to it at the time, but of holding fast to it it was an error upon which, in summing up

And there was one little battle to be fought with a single-minded persistency that never even takes in the idea of voluntary change, as on, "What would Robert Lyon say?" not actual falseness, but fickleness, which pre-He knewshe carned her daily bread; some-vails in the world and among mankind. "O times this had seemed to vex and annoy him, Robert, be faithful! faithful to yourself-faith-

CHAPTER XIV.

WHEN Miss Hilary reached home, Elizabeing any thing but a woman, as strong and beth opened the door to her; the parlor was think less of her, Hilary, because she had to little surprised: but on second thoughts she learn to take care of herself, to protect her-self, and to act in so many ways for herself, contrary to the natural and right order of but the dullness of their poverty was inex-"She will be back to din-

"What if he should look down upon me? about the girl—something that at any other What if he should return and find me different time would have aroused the direct question, burned in her eyes, as she walked rapidly and Hilary did not consider it beneath her dignity passionately along the descried street. Then to observe that things might occasionally go wrong with this solitary young woman, away "No; love is worth nothing that is not from her friends, and exposed to all the anworth every thing, and to be trusted through noyances of London lodgings; that many truevery thing. If he could forget me-could love fles might happen to worry and perplex her. any one better than me—me myself, no mat- If the mistress could not set them right, she ter what I was—ugly or pretty, old or young, could at least give the word of kindly symparich or poor—I would not care for his love. It thy, as precious to "a poor servant" as to the

This time, however, it came not, and Elizabeth disappeared below stairs immediately.

Her eyes flashed; her poor little hand The girl was revolving in her own mind a clenched itself under her shawl; and then, as difficult ethical question. To-day, for the first wildest paroxysm of passion and pain—"You and she could not make up her mind as to whether she ought to communicate them.

Now Elizabeth had a conscience, by nature

her life, the Recording Angel would gravely of date, and perhaps existing only in stray

The first trial had happened at breakfast exist. Hilary had it, and she had taught it Ascott, descending earlier than his to Elizabeth.

wont, had asked her. Did any gentleman. "I wonder whether Miss Hilary knows of short and dirty, with a hooked nose, inquire this? I wonder what she would say to it?" for him vesteraav?

Elizabeth thought a minute, and recollected tion aforesaid, as to whether Elizabeth ought that some person answering the above not too to tell her. flattering description had called, but refused. It was one of Miss Hilary's doctrines-the to leave his name, saying he did not know the same for the kitchen as for the parlor, nay, ladies, but was a particular friend of Mr. preached sirongest in the kitchen, where the ular friend; but my aunts would not tancy should be kept as sacred as if actually confidhim, and I don't want him to come here. Say, led: also, that the secret of an enemy should if he calls, that I'm gone out of town."

if he calls, that I'm goue out of town." no more be betrayed than that of a beloved "Very well, sir. Shall you start before and trusting friend.
dinner?" said Elizabeth, whose practical mind "Miss Selina isn't my enemy." smiled Elizabeth. joint, always contrived to be het on the days, I'd rather not tell of her, or vex her if I can that Ascott dined at home.

"Bless a bit." He seemed excessively tickled. you, you are the greatest innocent! Just say But the secret weighed heavily upon her. what I tell you, and never mind-hush! here's and besides, her honest heart felt a certain long wakefulness, had put out of Elizabeth's commenplace man, whom she could not have head the answer that was coming: indeed the met a dozen times, of whose domestic life she matter slipped from her mind altegether, in knew nothing, and whose personality Elizaconsequence of another circumstance which beth, with the sharp observation often found gave her much more perplexity.

up stairs, she had come suddenly into the ation--"Neither carriage nor horses, nor noparlor without knocking. There, to her a-thing, will ever make him a gentleman ?" that she was certain, absolutely certain, Mr. town."

the faithful domestic was a good deal troubled; ceived from "various members of the Comatill more so, when, by Miss Leaf's excessive mon Council of the City of London," Miss surprise at hearing of the visitor who had come Selina was, for her, meditative, and did not and gone, carrying Miss Selina away to the talk quite so much as usual. city, she was certain the elder sister was com-the little parlor an uncoinfortable atmosphere, pletely in the dark as to any thing going to as if all of them had something on their minds. nappen in the family.

horrid little man? For strange to say, this ter of the dim fire-light, young servant had, what many a young heau- "Selina, I wanted to have a little family ty of rank and fashion has not, or has lost consultation. I have just received an offer. forever-the true, pure, womanly creed, that "An offer?" repeated Miss Selina, with a loving and marrying are synonymous terms: visible start. "Oh, I forgot; you went to see that to let a man put his arm round your wour friend, Miss Balquidder, this morning. waist when you do not intend to marry him, Did you get any thing out of her? Has she or to intend to marry him for money or any any nephews and nicces wanting a governess?" thing else when you do not really love him, "She has no relations at all. But I will are things quite impossible and incredible to just tell you the story of my visit."

nooks of the world: but thank God! it does

And now arose the perplexing ethical quesmysteries of the parlor are often so cruelly Ascott laughed. "So he is-a very partic-exposed-that a secret accidentally found out immediately recurred to that meal, and to the abeth: "but I'in not overfond of her, and so help it. Any how, I'll keep it to myself for diminution of respect for Miss Selina. And Miss Hilary's anxious face, white with could she see to like in that common looking, in her class, probably because coarse people During her young mistress's absence, sup-do not care to hide their coarseness from serposing Miss Selina out too, and Miss Leaf vants, had speedily set down at her own valumazement, she saw Miss Selina and Mr. As- He, however, sent Miss Selina home magcott standing, in close conversation, over the nificently in the said carriage: Ascott with tire. They were so engrassed that they did her, who had been picked up somewhere in not notice her, and she shut door again im-the City, and who came in to his dinner, withmediately. But what confounded her was, out the slightest reference to going "out of.

Ascott had his arm round Miss Selina's waist! But in spite of her Lord Mavor's Show, and Now that was no business of hers, and yet the great attention which che said she had re-There was in Hilary felt the ice must be broken, and if she Could it be a wedding? Could Miss Selina did not do it nobody else would. So she said. really love, and be intending to marry, that stealing her hand into Johanna's under shel-any womanly mind. A creed somewhat out! "I hope it's interesting," said Ascott, who was lying on the sofa, half asleep, his general "You don't care, then, what becomes of us habit after dinner. He woke, however, dur-all? I sometimes begin to think so." ing his Aunt Hilary's relation, and when she! Struck by the tone, Ascott stopped in the act reached its climax, that the offer was for her of putting on his lilae kid gloves. "What to manage a stationer's shop, he burst out have I done? I may be a very bad fellow, but heartily laughing:

"Well, that is a rich idea. I'll come and buy of you. You'll look so pretty standing Johanna, tenderly.

behind a counter."

think of such a thing. It would be a disgrace aunt in that warm-hearted, impulsive way, to the family."

"No," said Hilary, clasping tightly her boyish fault. It did so now. eldest sister's hand—they two had already "I know I'm not half good enough to you, talked the matter over: "I can not see any Auntic, but I mean to be. I mean to work disgrace. If our family is so poor that the hard, and be a rich man some day; and then honestly earned. What do you say, Ascott?" meet a fellow on business—really business—sorely to find out what he really thought.

you all: I'm the head of the family. How sat down again round the fire. horribly dark this room is!"

the evening.

ed by asking Johanna to give her opinion.

Johanna roused herself and spoke:

"Ascott says right; he is the head of the na, with dignity. meantime we must live."

we must not run into debt:" and her voice the house; we can not get any tiff Christmas." sharpened as with the reflected horror of her "Opportunities might occur. We have young days—if, alas! there ever had been any friends." youth for Henry Leaf's eldest daughter. "No, "Not one in London; except, perhaps, Mr, Ascott, out of del t out of danger. For myself" Ascott, and I would not ask him for a farthing.

-she laid her thin old fingers on his arm, and You don't see, Selina, how horrible it would looked up at him with a pitiful mixture of re- be to be helped, unless by some one dearly liance and hopelessness-"I would rather see loved. I couldn't bear it! I'd rather beg, you breaking stones in the road than living starve: almost steal!" like a gentleman, as you call it, and a swind-ler, as I call it, upon other people's money." "Oh, but it's hard!" and the cry of long-have an engagement."

stay and join in the family consultation.

it among yourselves. As I said, it isn't my Selina, for I will do it." business."

I'm not quite so bad as that, Aunt Hilary."

"She didn't mean it, my boy," said Aunt

He was moved, more by the tenderness than But Selina said, angrily, "You cannot even the reproach. He came and kissed his eldest which had won him forgiveness for many a women must earn their living as well as the you may be sure I shall not let my Aunt Hilmen, all we have to see is that it should be any keep a shop. Now, good-night, for I must She looked earnestly at him; she wanted that may turn out good for us all, I assure you."

But Ascott took it, as he did every thing, He went away whistling, with that air of very easily. "I den't see why Aunt Selina untroubled, good-natured liveliness peculiar to should make such a fuss. Why need you do Ascott Leaf, which made them say continualanything, Aunt Hilary? Can't we hold out a ly that he was "only a boy," living a boy's little longer, and live upon tick till I get into life, as thoughtless and as free. When his practice? Of course, I shall then take care of handsome face disappeared the three women

They made no comments on him whatever; He started up, and gave the fire a fierce they were women, and he was their own. But poke, which consumed in five minutes a large —passing him over as if he had never existed lump of coal that Hilary had hoped—oh, —Hilary began to explain to her sisters all cruel, sordid economy—would have lasted half particulars of her new scheme for maintaining the family. She told these details in a matter She broke the uneasy silence which follow-of-fact way, as already arranged; and finally hoped Selina would make no more objections.

"It is a thing quite impossible," said Seli-

family, and, by-and-by, I trust will take care "Why impossible? I can certainly do the of us all. But he is not able to do it now, and work; and it can not make me less of a lady. Besides, we had better not be ladies if we can "To be sure, we must, Auntie." | not be honest ones. And, Selina, where is "I mean, my boy, we must live honestly: the money to come from? We have none in Ascott sprang up, coloring violently. "You smothered pain burst out. "Hard enough to use strong language, Aunt Johanna. Never have to earn one's bread in a way one doesn't mind. I dare say you are right. However, like: harder still to have to be parted from it's no business of mine. Good-night, for I Johanna from Monday morning till Saturday night. But it must be. I'll go. It's a case Hilary said, gravely, she wished he would between hunger, debt, and work; the first is unpleasant, the second impossible, the third "Oh no: I hate talking over things. Settle is my only alternative. You must consent,

"Don't!" Selina spoke more gently, and not without some natural emotion. "Don't'so. He makes a good settlement on me, and disgrace me, child; for I may as well tell you says how happy he will be to help my family, —I meant to do so to-night—Mr. Ascott has so as to enable you always to make a respectmade me an offer of marriage, and I-I have able appearance." accepted it."

Had a thunder-bolt fallen in the middle of the parlor at No. 15, its inmates—that is, two And he must feel that this marriage is a sort of them-could not have been more astound-of-ahem! condescension on my part, which

No doubt this surprise was a great instance ago." of simplicity on their part. Many women would have prognosticated, planned the thing that twenty years ago? Perhaps, shallow as from the first; thought it a most excellent she seemed, this woman might once have had match; seen glorious visions of the house in some fancy, some ideal man whom she ex-Russell Square, of the wealth and luxury that peeted to meet and marry: possibly a very would be the portion of "dear Selina," and different sort of man from Mr. Peter Ascott. the general benefit that the marriage would be However, the sigh was but momentary: she to the whole Leaf family.

They only saw their sister Selina, a woman the wedding-dress, she had evidently decided. no longer young, and not without her peculi- "And therefore you see," she added, as if arities, going to be married to a man she knew the unimportant, almost forgotten item of dislittle or nothing about—a man whom they cussion had suddenly occurred to her, "it's themselves had endured rather than liked, and quite impossible that my sister should keep a for the sake of gratitude. He was trying shop. I shall tell Mr. Ascott, and you will enough merely as a chance visitor; but to see what he says to it." look upon Mr. Ascott as a brother-in-law, as But when Mr. Ascott appeared next day in a husband—tinued, majestically, more unexceptionable offer. It is true, Mr. Leaf would not be put over the door. Ascott's origin was rather humble: but I can But the bride-elect, indignant and annoyed. overlook that. In his present wealth, and begged her lover to interfere, and prevent the with his position and character, he will make scheme from being carried out.

the best of husbands."

answered? Selina was free to marry if she stranger use the household name--"but I liked, and whom she liked. Perhaps, from can't see that it's my business to interfere. I her nature, it was idle to expect her to marry marry you. I don't marry your whole family." in any other way than this; one of the thous- "Mr. Ascott is quite right; we will end the and and one unions where the man desires a subject." said Johanna, with grave dignity: handsome, lady-like wife for the head of his while Hilary sat with burning cheeks, thinkestablishment, and the woman wishes an ele-ling that, miserable as the family had been, it gant establishment to be mistrees of; so they had never till now known real degradation. strike a bargain—possibly as good as most other bargains.

ry asked if she had quite decided.

gave him his answer this morning.

with her "love affairs." It was entirely a longing to come home, and a dread that it matter of business.

The sisters saw at once that she had made ized. up her mind. Henceforward there could be no criticism of Mr. Peter Ascott.

Now all was told, she talked freely of her hard my life out here may be. I bear it alone."

excellent prospects.

"He had behaved handsomely-very much ary. That they two should be wasting their

"We are exceedingly obliged to him."

"Don't be sharp, Hilary. He means well. I never should have dreamed of twenty years

Selma sighed: could it be at the thought of plunged back again into all the arrangements But these two were different from others, of her wedding, every one of which, down to solemn state as an accepted lover he seemed "Oh, Selina! you can not be in earnest?" to care very little about the matter. He thought "Why not? Why should I not be married it was a good thing for every body to be inas well as my neighbors?" said she, sharply, dependent; did not see why young women-Nobody arguing that point, both being in he begged pardon, young ladies -- should not deed too bewildered to argue at all, she con-jearn their own bread if they liked. He only wished that the shop were a little further off "I assure you, sisters, there could not be a than Kensington, and hoped the name of

"Don't vex yourself, my dear Selina," said Not a word was answered; what could be he, dryly—how Hilary started to hear this

But her heart was very sore that day. In the morning had come the letter from India. Still, with one faint lingering of hope, Hila-never omitted, never delayed; Robert Lyon was punctual as clock-work in every thing he "Quite. He wrote to me last night, and I did. It came, but this month it was a short and somewhat sad letter—hinting of failing Selina certainly had not troubled any body health, uncertain prospects; full of a bitter would be years before that longing was real-

"My only consolation is," he wrote, for once betraying himself a little, "that however

But that consolation was not so easy to Hil-

coins—of which men like Mr. Ascott had for any. Her great treat was when, on a such profusion—would bring them together; Sunday afternoon, Miss Hilary sometimes and, let trials be many or poverty hard, give took her to Westminster Abbey or St. Paul's; them the unutterable jo; of being once more when her pleasure and gratitude always struck face to face and heart to heart—oh, it was her mistress—nay, even soothed her, and won sore, sore!

where the newly-affianced couple sat together, being, even for an hour or two, entirely happy. "making-believe" a passion that did not ex- Except these bright Sundays, Elizabeth's ist, and acting out the sham courtship, proper whole time was spent in waiting upon Miss for the gentleman to pay and the lady to re-Leaf, who had seemed to grow suddenly frail ceive-when she shut her bedroom door, and and old. It might be that living without her there, sitting in the cold, read again and again child six days out of the seven was a greater Robert Lyon's letter to Johanna, so good, so trial than had at first appeared to the elder honest; so sad, yet so bravely enduring-Hil-sister, who until now had never parted with ary was comforted. She felt that true love, her since she was born; or it was perhaps a in its most unsatisfied longings, its most ernel more commonplace and yet natural cause, the delays, nav, even its sharpest agonies of hope living in London lodgings, without even a less separation, is sweeter ten thousand times change of air from room to room; and the than the most "respectable" of loveless mar-want of little comforts and luxuries, which, the preparations for her wedding.

So, at the week's end, Hilary went patient-lever to their limited means. ly to her work at Kensington, and Selina began

CHAPTER XV.

In relating so much about her mistresses, I still she spent something. have lately seemed to overlook Elizabeth Hand.

and then- But it remained to be proved take place at a hotel.

what this grad would be.

about in those days: how she remained as old-Miss Hilary came home from Saturday to life must have been great-greater than her it so fell out that Miss Hilary never discoverrather than to enjoy.

She made no acquaintances, and never asked to her enemies.

youth apart, when just a little heap of yellow|for holidays. Indeed she did not seem to care her from her own many anxieties. It is such Yet when she went u_P from the parlor, a blessing to be able to make any other human with all Hilary's care, were as impossible as

For Selina's engagement, which, as a matter of decorum, she had insisted should last six months, did not lessen expenses. gowns were shabby, and omnibuses impossible to the future Mrs. Ascott of Russell Square; and though, to do her justice, she spent as little as to her self-pleasing nature was possible,

"It's the last; I shall never cost you any more," she would say, complacently; and re-She was a person easy enough to be over-vert to that question of absorbing interest, her looked. She never put herself forward, not trousscau, an extremely handsome one, provideven now, when Miss Hilary's absence caused ed liberally by Mr. Ascott. Sorely had this the weight of housekeeping and domestic man-arrangement jarred upon the pride of the Leaf agement to fall chiefly upon her. She went family; yet it was inevitable. But no perabout her duties as soberly and silently as she sonal favors would the other two sisters have had done in her girlhood; even Miss Leaf accepted from Mr. Ascott, even had he offered could not draw her into much demonstrative-them—which he did not—save a dress each ness: she was one of those people who never for the marriage, and a card for the marriage "come out" till they are strongly needed, breakfast, which, he also arranged, was to

So, in spite of the expected wedding, there Years afterward Hilary remembered with was little change in the dull life that went on what a curious reticence Elizabeth used to go at No. 15. Its only brightness was when tashioned as ever; acquired no London ways, Monday. And in those brief glumpses, when, no tripperies of dress or flippancies of manner as was natural, she on her side, and they on Also, that she never complained of anything; theirs, put on their best face, so to speak, each though the discomforts of her lodging-house trying to hide from the other any special care, mistresses had any idea of at the time. Slow-ed a thing which, week by week, Elizabeth ly, out of her rough, unpliant girlhood, was resolved to speak to her about, and yet never forming that character of self-reliance and could. For it was not her own affair; it self-control, which, in all ranks, makes of some seemed like presumptuously meddling in the women the helpers rather than the helped, affairs of the family. Above all, it involved the laborers rather than the pleasure-seekers; the necessity of something which looked like women whose constant lot it seems to be to tale-bearing and backbiting of a person she walk on the shadowed side of life, to endure disliked, and there was in Elizabeth—servant as she was—an instinctive chivalrous honor Elizabeth had very little actual enjoyment, which made her especially anxious to be just

Enemy, however, is a large word to use: are such utter children in practice, that they and yet day by day her feelings grew more have to learn the value and use of money by bitter toward the person concerned-namely, hard experience, much as a child does, and are Mr. Ascott Leaf. It was not from any badness little better than children in all that concerns in him: he was the sort of young man always L. S. D. to the end of their days. likely to be a favorite with what would be But these are debtors by accident, not error, termed his "inferiors;" easy, good-tempered, The deliberate debtor, who orders what he and gentlemanly, giving a good deal of trou-knows he has no means of paying for; the ble certainly, but giving it so agreeably that pleasure-loving debtor, who can not renounce few servants would have grumbled, and pay- one single luxury for conscience' sake; the ing for it—as he apparently thought every well-meaning, lazy debtor, who might make thing could be paid for—with a pleasant word "ends meet," but does not, simply because he will not take the trouble; upon such as these and a handful of silver.

But Elizabeth's distaste for him had deeper it is right to have no mercy—they deserve The principal one was his exceeding none. indifference to his aunts' affairs, great and To which of these classes young Ascott Leaf small, from the marriage, which he briefly belonged his story will show. I tell it, or designated as a "jolly lark," to the sharp rather let it tell itself, and point its own moral; economies which, even with the addition of it is the story of hundreds and thousands. Miss Hilary's salary, were still requisite. That a young fellow should not enjoy his None of these latter did he ever seem to notice, youth would be hard; that it should not be except when they pressed upon himself: when pleasant to him to dress well, live well, and he neither scolded nor argued, but simply spend with open hand upon himself as welt went out and avoided them. as others, no one will question. No one would He was now absent from home more than ever wish it otherwise. Many a kindly spend-ever, and apparently tried as much as possible thrift of twenty-one makes a prudent paterfato keep the household in the dark as to his milias at forty, while a man who in his twenmovements-leaving at uncertain times, never ties showed a purposeless niggardliness, would saying what hour he would be back, or if he at sixty grow into the most contemptible miser said so, never keeping to his word. This was alive. There is something even in the thoughtthe more annoying as there were a number of less liberality of youth to which one's heart people continually inquiring for him, hanging warms, even while one's wisdom reproves.—about the house, and waiting to see him "on But what struck Elizabeth was that Ascott's business;" and some of these occasionally liberalities were always toward himself, and commented on the young gentleman in such himself only. unflattering terms that Elizabeth was afraid. Sometimes when she took in a parcel of they would reach the ear of Mrs. Jones, and new clothes, while others yet unpaid for were henceforward tried always to attend to the tossing in wasteful disorder about his room, door herself.

But Mrs. Jones was a wide-awake woman, some boots, and washed dozens of the finest She had not let lodgings for thirty years for cambric pocket handkerchiefs, her spirit grew nothing. Ere long she discovered, and took hot within her to remember Miss Hilary's good care to inform Elizabeth of her discove-countless wants and contrivances in the matter ry, that Mr. Ascott Leaf was what is euphnist- of dress, and all the little domestic comforts ically termed "in difficulties."

lad's story I may be supposed to tell it harsh-nephew's imagination. Of course not, it will ly or uncharitably, as it there was no crime be said: how could a young man be expected greater than that which a large portion of so-to trouble himself about these things? merest mention of the ugly word debt, this ow's son; many a heedful brother of orphan rabid author flew out, and made all the ultra-sisters; many a solitary clerk living and payafter all.

the tenderly reared family who by some strange ry: as it moves on it will preach enough for blunder or unkind kindness have been kept itself. in ignorance of their real circumstances, and Elizabeth's annoyances, suspicions, and conbeen spending pounds for which there was science-pricks as to whether she ought or only pence to pay; the individuals, men or ought not to communicate both, came to an

or when she cleaned indefinite pairs of hand-

which Miss Leaf's frail health required-And here one word, lest in telling this poor things which never once seemed to cross the

ciety seems to count as none; as if, at the, But they do though. Answer, many a widvirtuous persons whose history is here told, ing his way upon the merest pittance; is it my out, like turkeys, after a bit of red cloth, not better to think of others than one's self? which is a very harmless scrap of red cloth Can a man, even a young man, find his highest happiness in mere personal enjoyment?

Most true, some kind of debt deserves only. However, let me cease throwing these pebcompassion. The merchant suddenly failing: bles of preaching under the wheels of my stowomen, who, without any laxity of principle, end at last. Gradually she made up her mind that, even if it did look like tale-bearing, on his hat slouched, so as in some measure to the following Saturday night Miss Hilary act as a disguise, breathless and tremblingmust know all.

tallen ill. Not seriously; and she never com-young man, Mr. Ascott Leaf. plained until her sister had left, when she returned to her bed and did not again rise. She self across the bed. would not have Miss Hilary sent for, nor Miss Selina, who was away paying a ceremonions beth, from the door. pre-nuptial visit to Mr. Ascott's partner's wife

"I don't want any thing that you can not do! for me. You are becoming a first-rate nurse, Elizabeth," she said, with that passive, peace-of them. If they know I'm here the game's ful smile which almost frightened the girl; it all up—and it will kill my aunt." her nephew's affairs was perfectly impossible, down on the pillow, muttering all sorts of How thankful she was that in the quiet of the hopeless self-accusations. sick-room her mistress was kept in ignorance. "Come, Sir, 'tis no use taking on so," said of the knocks and inquiries at the door, and she, much as she would have spoken to a especially of a certain ominous paper which child, for there was something childish rather had tallen into Mrs. Jones's hands, and in than man-like in Ascott's distress. Nevertheformed her, as she took good care to inform less, she pitied him, with the unreasoning pity Elizabeth, that any day "the bailiffs" might a kind heart gives to any creature, who, be after her young master.

"And the sooner the whole set of you clear" What do you mean to do?" out of my house the better; I am a decent, respectable woman," said Mrs. Jones, that haven't a friend in the world." very morning; and Elizabeth had had to beg. He turned his face to the wall in perfect her as a favor not to disturb her sick mistress, despair.

bid her say if any body wanted him he was calamity. then stooped to entreaties, begging her to do tea, and not even Mrs. Jones will be any the as he asked, or it would be the ruin of him. wiser." Which she understood well enough when, all went in or out of it.

Now, sitting at Miss Leaf's window, she lar stunning bottle of paleale." fancied she saw this man disappear into the gin-palace opposite, and at the same moment ner, and into the door of No. 15.

asleep, and then crept quietly out of the room, ner, and kept his secret, even though, hearing shutting the door after her. Listening, she from over the staircase Mrs. Jones resolutely heard the sound of the latch-key, and of some deny that Mr. Leaf had been at home since one coming stealthily up stairs.

"Hollo!—Oh, it's only you, Elizabeth."

"Shall I light your candle, sir?"

Drenched with rain, his collar pulled up, and home?" but fortunately it was not asked.—

hardly any body would have recognized in It was an anxious week; for Miss Leaf had this discretitable object that gentlemanly

He staggered into his room and threw him-

"Do you want any thing, Sir?" said Eliza-

"No-yes-stay a minute. Elizabeth, are yon to be trusted?"

-" I hope I am, Sir."

"The bailitts are after me. I've just dodgseemed as if she were slipping away from this Shocked as she was, Elizabeth was glad to world and all its cares into another existence, hear him say that glad to see the burst of Elizabeth felt that to tell her any thing about real emotion with which he flung himself blameworthy or not, has fallen into trouble.

"Nothing. I'm cleaned out. 'And I

but to wait one day, till Miss Hilary came | Elizabeth tried hard not to sit in judgment upon what the catechism would call her "bet-Also, when Ascott, ending with a cheerful ters;" and yet her own strong instinct of aland careless countenance his ten minutes' af most indefinite endurance turned with someter-breakfast chat in his aunt's room, had met thing approaching contempt from this weak, Elizabeth on the staircase, he had stopped to lightsome nature, broken by the first touch of gone to Birmingham, and would not be home "Come, it's no use making things worse till Monday. And on Elizabeth's hesitating, than they are. It no body knows that you she having determined to tell no more of these are here, lock your door and keep quiet. I'll involuntary lies, he had been very angry, and bring you some dinner when I bring up Missis'

"You're a brick, Elizabeth—a regular the day, she-grown painfully wise, poor girl! brick!" cried the young fellow, brightening up -watched a Jewish-looking man hanging at the least relief. "That will be capital.about the house, and noticing every body that Get me a good slice of beef, or ham, or something. And mind you, don't forget!—a regu-

"Very well, Sir."

The acquiescence was somewhat sullen, and a figure darted hurriedly round the street cor-had he watched Elizabeth's face he might have seen there an expression not too flatter-Elizabeth looked to see if her mistress were ing. But she faithfully brought him his diumorning, she felt very much as if she were conniving at a lie. With a painful, halfguilty consciousness she waited for her mis-But when she did the sight was not pleasant. tress's usual question, "Is my nephew come Miss Leaf lay quiet and passive, and her faith-ful nurse settled her for the night with a strangely solemn feeling, as if she were leaving her to her last rest, safe and at peace before

"Honored Madam,—Mr. Leaf has got himself into trou-ble, and is taken away somewhere; and I dare not tell missis: and I wish you was at home, as she is not well, but better than she has been, and she shall know nothing about it till you come.—Your obedient and affectionate servant, ELIZABETH HAND." the overhanging storm broke upon the family.

soon as the house was still Ascott crept down most losing her way among the gloomy and fell to his supper with as good an appetite squares, where she met not a creature except as possible. He even became free and con the solitary policeman, plashing steadily along versational.

soon weather through. Old Ascott will fork like a guilty creature, till she remembered out; he couldn't help it. I'm to be his nephew that she really was doing nothing wrong, and you know. Oh, that was a clever catch of so need not be afraid of any thing. This was Aunt Selina's. If only Aunt Hilary would her simple creed, which Miss Hilary had try another like it."

"If you please, Sir, I'm going to bed."

"Off with you, then, and I'll not forget the to make the usual unmannerly acknowledg-a respectable family at this late hour? ment of civility from a young gentleman to a servant maid, viz., kissing her, but he pulled determined to say, as sufficiently explaining a face and drew back. He really couldn't; her errand, and yet betraying nothing that her she was so very plain.

At this moment there came a violent ring, and "Fire!" was shouted through the key-My missis is ill, and I want a letter sent at hole of the door. Terrified, Elizabeth ovened once to Miss Hilary." it, when, with a burst of laughter, a man rushed in and laid hands upon Ascott.

It was the sheriff's officer.

When his trouble came upon him Ascott's manliness returned. He turned ver; white, of the night? Did your mistress send you?" but he made no opposition; had even enough of his wits about him—or someting better than wits—to stop Mrs. Jones from rushing saw Miss Hilary to-day, and she knew noup in alarm and indignation to arouse Miss thing at all about it."

"No; she'll know it quite soon enough.—eye that seemed to read her through. Let her sleep till morning. Elizabeth, look here." He wrote upon a card the address of me, young woman. Is it because your misthe place he was to be taken to. "Give Aunt tress is in serious danger that you want to send Hilary this. Say if she can think of a way for her sister?" to get me out of this horrid mess; but I don't deserve—Never mind. Come on, you fellows."

He pulled his hat over his eyes, jumped in-The whole thing ground. to the cab, and was gone.

had not occupied five minutes.

what was best to be done. Miss Hilary must and therefore I'd rather not tell you." be told; but how to get at her in the middle Now the honest Scotswoman, as she said, of the night, thereby leaving her mistress to hated any thing underhand, but she respected the mercy of Mrs. Jones. It would never do. the right of every human being to maintain Suddenly she thought of Miss Balquidder .- silence if necessary. She looked sharply in She might send a message. No, not a mess-|Elizabeth's face, which apparently re-assured age—for the family misery and disgrace must her, for she said, not unkindly, not be betrayed to a stranger—but a letter to "Very well, child, keep your mistress's senot be betrayed to a stranger—but a letter to Kensington.

With an effort Elizabeth composed herself want. Shall I take a cab and fetch Miss sufficiently to write one—her first—to her Hilary at once?"

dear Miss Hilary.

Taking Ascott's latch-key she quitted the But all shadow of this storm seemed to have passed away from him who was its cause. As house and slipped out into the dark night, althe wet pavement. When he turned the "Don't look so glum, Elizabeth. I shall glimmer of his bull's eye upon her she started taught her, and it upheld her, even till she knocked at Miss Balquidder's door.

There, poor girl, her heart sank, especially gown at Christmas. You're a sharp young when Miss Balquidder, in an anomalous coswoman, and I'm much obliged to you." And tume and a severe voice, opened the door for a moment he looked as if he were about herself, and asked who was there, disturbing mistress might wish concealed.

Elizabeth answered, what she had before

"Please, ma'am, I'm Miss Leaf's servant.

"Oh! come in, then. Elizabeth, I think, your name is?"

"Yes, ma'am,"

"What made you leave home at this hour ". No."

"Is she so very ill? It seems sudden. I

Elizabeth shrank a little before the keen

"There's more amiss than you have told

"No."

"What is it then? You had better tell me at once. I hate concealment."

It was a trial; but Elizabeth held her

"I beg your pardon, ma'am; but I don't Stupefied, Elizabeth stood and considered think missis would like any body to know, crets by all means. Only tell me what you

Elizabeth thanked her, but said she thought that would not do; it would be better just to sore trouble, this bitter humiliation. send the note the first thing to-morrow morn-was no attempt at disguise or concealment ing, and then Miss Hilary would come home between mistress and maid. just as if nothing had happened, and Miss Leaf would not be frighted by her sudden ap-abeth. How is my sister? She does not

"You are a good, mindful girl," said Miss Balquidder. "How did you learn to be so this morning. She has been very bad all week; sensible?"

bewildered and exhausted with the excitement she had gone through, and agitated by the began to weep. feeling of having, for the first time in her life, to act on her own responsibility, gave way a tears, for she had been perplexed by the hard, little. She did not exactly cry, but she was dry-eyed look of misery, deeper than anything very near it.

Miss Balquidder called over the stair-head, stances seemed to warrant in her quick, imperative voice—to the kitchen and give her some supper. And this ominous "beginning of the end." The afterward, will you see her safe home, poor fatal end-which seemed to overhang like a lassie? She's awfully tire.l, you see."

"No, ma'am."

"Yes, ma'am."

And following David's gray head, Elizabeth, took a comfortable meal in a comfortable ers a right to be one another's first thought?) kitchen, seasoned with such stories of Miss - what would Robert Lyon say? To his honthan she could have believed possible under in his freedom from all false pride, had susthe circumstances.

CHAPTER XVI.

unanxious countenance which those about an on his; felt how they would annoy and vex invalid must learn continually to wear, Elizahim. The exquisitely natural thought which beth was trying to persuade her mistress not Tennyson has put into poetryto rise, she heard a knock, and made some excuse for escaping. She well knew what it was and who had come.

wants you."

Elizabeth immediately shut. Then Miss Leaf family.

Hilary stretched her hands across the table It appeared like a fate. No use to try and and looked up piteously in her servant's face struggle out of it, stretching her arms up to whom she could look for any comfort in this there to be sheltered, taken care of, and made

"Mrs. Jones has told me every thing, Elizknow?"

"No; and I think she is a good deal better only she would not let me send for you. She At the kindly word and manner, Elizabeth, is really getting well now; I'm sure of that!"

"Thank God!" And then Miss Hilary

Elizabeth also was thankful, even for those she could comprehend, or than the circum-

It was deeper. The misery was not only "David, is your wife away to her bed yet?" Ascott's arrest; many a lad has got into debt and got out again—the first taste of the law "Then tell her to fetch this young woman proving a warning to him for life; but it was hereditary cloud, to taint as with hereditary disease, the Leaf family.

Another bitterness (and who shall blame it, for the first time since she came to London, for when love is really love, have not the lov-Balquidder's goodness and generosity, that est Scotch nature poverty was nothing; honor when, an hour after, she went home and to every thing. She knew his horror of debt was sleep, it was with a quieter and more hopeful even equal to her own. This, and her belief tained her against many doubts lest he might think the less of her because of her present position—might feel ashamed could be see her sitting at her ledger in that high desk, or even occasionally serving in the shop.

Many a time things she would have passed NEXT morning, while with that cheerful, over lightly on her own account she had felt

"If I am dear to some one else, Then I should be to myself more dear "- had often come, prosaically enough perhaps, There, in the parlor, sat Miss Hilary, Mrs. into her head, and prevented her from spoiling Jones talking at her rather than to her, for she her little hands with unnecessarily rough work, hardly seemed to hear. But that she had or carelessly passing down ill streets and by-heard every thing was clear enough. Her ways, where she knew Robert Lyon, had he drawn white face, the tight clasp of her hands, been in London, would never have allowed showed that the ill tidings had struck her her to go. Now what did such things signify? What need of taking care of herself? These "Go away, Mrs. Jones," cried Elizabeth, were all superficial, external disgraces, the fiercely. "Miss Hilary will call when she real disgrace was within. The plague-spot had burst out anew; it seemed as if this day And with an ingenious movement that just were the recommencement of that bitter life of fell short of a push, somehow the woman was penury, misery, and humiliation, familiar got on the other side of the parlor door, which through three generations to the women of the

Only a servant; only that poor servant to Robert Lyon's tender, honest, steadfast heart,

to go on enduring and enduring to the end. | pecially you, Johanna.

perhaps, yet excusable. It might have lasted have brought to you!" longer—though in her healthy nature it could "God will provide," said Johanna, earnestnot have lasted very long-had not the reac-ly. "But I know, my dear, this is sharper to tion come, suddenly and completely, by the you than to me. Besides, I have been more opening of the parlor door, and the appearance used to it."

ed nor agitated, who hearing somehow that Leaf's wife and eldest daughter used to have her child had arrived, had hastily dressed her- to give dinner parties upon food that stuck in self, and come down stairs, in order not to their throats, as if every morsel had been stofrighten Hilary. And as she took her in her len; which in truth it was, and yet they were arms, and kissed her with those mother-like helpless, innocent thieves; when they and the kisses, which were the sweetest Hilary had as children had to wear clothes that seemed to yet ever known-the sharp anguish went out poison them like the shirt of Dejanira; when of the poor girl's heart.

long as I have you."

miserable secret about Ascott came out. Being once out, it did not seem half so those days, Hilary. Ascott is young: he may dreadful: nor was its effect nearly so serious mend. People can mend, my child; and he as Miss Hilary and Elizabeth had feared .- had such a different bringing-up from what his Miss Leaf bore it wonderfully: she might al- father had, and his grandfather, too. We most have known it beforehand: they would must not be hopeless yet. You see," and mahave thought she had, but that she said deci-king Hilary kneel down before her, she took dedly she had not.

though it was very good and thoughtful of you, gling as young, honest, upright hearts do Elizabeth. You have gone through a great struggle with something which their whole deal for our sakes, my poor girl."

first and the last.

moved them both. "You shall tell me the bury. But he is young: that is my hope of rest another time. Go down now, and get him: and he was always fond of his aunts. Miss Hilary some breakfast."

When Elizabeth had departed the sisters turned to one another. They did not talk I don't believe in words." much; where was the use of it? They both knew the worst, both as to facts and fears.

"What must be done, Johanna?"

but one thing—to get him home."

long the room.

We can not help him. He does not deserve to one, was wicked injustice to others: as if helping. If the debts were for food now, or there were times when it is right and needful any necessaries; but for mere luxuries, mere to lop off, at once and forever, a rotten branch fine clothes: it is his tailor who has arrested rather than let the whole tree go to rack and him, you know. I would rather have gone ruin. I would do it! I should think myself in rags! I would rather see us all in rags! - justified in doing it." It's mean, setfish, cowardly, and I despise him ["But not just yet. He is only a boy-our for it. Though he is my own flesh and blood, own boy." I despise him."

" Hilary !"

eyes, "I don't mean that I despise him. I'm never might find, its natural channel, wept sorry for him: there is good in him, poor dear together over this lad, almost as mothers weep. lad; but I despise his weakness; I feel fierce "But what can we do?" said Hilary at last.

happy. No happiness for her! Nothing but to think how much it will cost us all, and es-Only think what Such was Hilary's first emotion; morbid comforts of all sorts that thirty pounds would

She closed her eyes, with a half shudder, as Miss Leaf-pale, indeed: but neither alarm-if living over again the old days -when Henry they durst not walk along special streets, nor "Oh, Johanna! I can bear any thing as pass particular shops, for the feeling that the shop people must be staring, and pointing, and And so in this simple and natural way the jiling at them, "Pay me what thou owest!" "But things can not again be so bad as ther by both hands, as if to impart something

"Still you need not have minded telling me: of her own quietness to this poor heart, strug-lnature revolts against, and loathes, and scorns Elizabeth burst into one smothered sol the —" you see, the boy is our boy: our own flesh and blood: We were very foolish to let him "Nay," said Miss Leaf, very kindly away from us for so long. We might have for this unwonted emotion in their servant made him better if we had kept him at Stowand is still, I think."

Hilary smiled sadly. "Deeds, not words.

"Well, let us put aside believing, and only act. Let us give him another chance."

Hilary shook her head. "Another, and Johanna, after a long pause, said, "I see another, and another—it will be always the same. I know it will. I can't tell how it is. Hilary started up, and walked to and fro a Johanna: but whenever I look at you, I feel so stern and hard to Ascott. It seems as if "No, not that. I will never agree to it .- there were circumstances when pity to some,

And the two women, in both of whom the maternal passion existed strong and deep, yet "No," and the tears burst from her angry in the one never had found, and in the other it with; must we borrow?"

the diamond ring."

daughter to eldest daughter of the Leaf family, erable? Ascott Leaf.

the world no more?

body to do but herself.

shall find my way to the sponging-house—isn't bridegroom" under the sun. though my name is Leaf."

self. She summoned Elizabeth, and began so near to her that she was at rest, she hardly giving her all domestic directions, just as usu-knew why. al; finally, bade her sister good-by in a tone as like her usual tone as possible, and left her who condescend to read this story may des-settled on the sofa in content and peace.

ry had asked her for the eard on which Ascott persons," in short. I can not help it. had written the address of the place where he write for the poor; not to excite the compashad been taken to; and though the girl said sion of the rich toward them, but to show them quiry.

Her mistress patted her on the shoulder.

no harm, Elizabeth."

"It's a bad place; such a dreadful place,

Mrs. Jones savs."

"Is it?" Elizabeth guessed part, not the "Better is a dry morsel, and quietness therewhole of the feelings that made Hilary liesi-with, than a house full of sacrifices and strife." tate, shrink even, from the duty before her, With these two sage proverbs-which all quickly through the Crescent. It was a clear, child; weaving many a mingled web of thought sunshiny, frosty day-such a day as always withal, yet never letting a stitch go down; and

"Thirty pounds, and not a halfpenny to pay both cheered and calmed her. She had, despite all her cares, youth, health, energy; and "Oh no-no," was the answer, with a a holy and constant love lay like a sleeping shrinking gesture: "no borrowing. There is angel in her heart. Must I tell the truth, and own that before she had gone two streets' This was a sort of heir-loom from eldest length Hilary ceased to feel so very, very mis-

which had been kept even as a sort of super- Love-this kind of love of which I speakstition, through all temptations of poverty.—is a wonderful thing, the most wonderful thing The last time Miss Leaf looked at it she had in all the world. The strength it gives, the remarked, jestingly, it should be given some brightness, the actual happiness, even in hardest day to that important personage talked of for times, is often quite miraculous. When Hilmany a year among the three aunts-Mrs. ary sat waiting in the jeweler's shop, she watched a little episode of high life-two "Who must do without it now," said Jo-wealthy people choosing their marriage plate; hanna, looking regretfully at the ring; "that the bride, so careless and haughty; the brideis, if he ever takes to himselfa wife, poor boy." groom, so unutterably mean to look at, stamp-Hilary answered, beneath her breath, "Un- ed with that innate smallness and coarseness less he alters, I carnestly hope he never may." of soul which his fine clothes only made more And there came over her involuntarily a wild, apparent. And she thought—oh, how fondly despairing thought, Would it not be better that she thought !- of that honest, manly mein; neither Ascott nor herself should ever be mar-of that true, untainted heart, which she felt ried, that the family might die out, and trouble sure, had never loved any woman but herself; of the warm, firm hand, carving its way thro' Nevertheless she rose up to do what she the world for her sake, and waiting patiently knew had to be done, and what there was no-till it could openly clasp hers, and give her every thing it had won. She would not have "Don't mind it, Johanna; for indeed I dolexchanged him, Robert Lyon, with his penninot. I shall go to a first rate, respectable jew-less love, his half-hopeless fortunes, or maybe eler, and he will not cheat me: and then I his lot of never-ending care, for the "brawest that what they call it? I dare say many a Under this sun-the common, everyday winpoor woman has been there before me. I am ter sun of Regent and Oxford streets—she not the first, and shall not be the last, and no-walked now as brightly and bravely as if there body will harm me. I think I look honest, were no trouble before her, no painful meeting with Ascott, no horrid humiliation from She laughed—a bitter laugh; but Johanna which every womanly feeling in her nature silenced it in a close embrace; and when Hil-shrunk with acute pain. "Robert, my Robary rose up again she was quite her natural ert!" she whispered in her heart, and felt him

Possibly grand, or clever, or happy people pise it, think it unideal, uninteresting; treat-Elizabeth followed to the door. Miss Hila-ling of small things and common people-"poor not a word, her anxious eyes made piteous in their own dignity and the bright side of their poverty. For it has its bright side; and its yery darkest, when no sin is mixed up there-"Never mind about me; I shall come to with, is brighter than many an ontwardly prosperous life.

"Better is a dinner of herbs, where love is,

than a stalled on and hatred therewith.

turning first so hot, and then so pale. Only acknowledge and scarcely any really believe, as a duty could she have done it at all. "No or surely they would act a little more as if they matter, I must go. Take care of my sister." did—I leave Johanna Leaf sitting silently in She ran down the door steps, and walked her solitary parlor, knitting stockings for her Hilary Leafwalking cheerily and fearlessly up amount, and looking steadily into Ascott's one strange street and down another to find eyes, out the "bad" place, where she once had no He flushed up, and asked what she meant idea it would ever have been her lot to go.— by doubting his word?

One thing she knew, and gloried in the know"Not that, but you might easily have made ledge, that if Robert Lyon had known she was a mistake: you are so carcless about money going, or known half the cares she had to matters."

—have risked fortune, competence, hope of the come to grief. But I never mean to be carefuture, which was the only cheer of his hard less any more. I'll be as precise as you. I'll not mean to tell. Hilary never told it till, shop, Aunt Hilary." years after, she wept it out upon a bosom that So he was rattling on, but Hilary stopped could understand the whole, and would take him by pointing to the figures. good care that while the life beat in his she, "You see, this sum is more than we expectnever should go through the like again.

Ascott came home—that is, was brought self. You are a man now." home-very humbled, contrite, and grateful. "I know that," said Ascott, sullenly; "but There was no one to meet him but his Aunt what's the use of it?-money only makes the Johanna, and she just kissed him quietly, and man, and I have none. If the ancient Peter bade him come over to the fire; he was shiv-would but die now and leave me his heir, ering, and somewhat pale. He had even two though to be sure Aunt Selina might be puttears in his handsome eyes, the first Ascott ting her oar in. Perhaps-considering I'm had been known to shed since he was a boy. Aunt Selina's nephew-if I were to walk into That he felt a good deal, perhaps as much as the old chap now he might be induced to fork was in his nature to feel, there could be no out! Hurrah! that's a splendid idea." doubt. So his two aunts were glad and comforted: gave him his tea and the warmest seat at the hearth; said not a harsh word to him, but talked to him about indifferent things .- you would have him keep on giving -- and you Tea being over. Hilary was anxious to get ev-would take and take and take-Ascott, I'm ery thing painful ended before Selina came ashamed of you." home—Selina, who, they felt by instinct, had now a separate interest from themselves, and sence !-- he has money and I have none; why had better not be told this sad story if possible: shouldn't he give it me?" so she asked her nephew "if he remembered "Why?"-she repeated, her eyes flashing what they had to do this evening?"

together."

"His debts came to more than the thirty young man." pounds then?" said his Aunt Johanna, when and sat waiting, with a dall, silent patience in arming. Whatever his faults, they were more her look, at which Johanna sighed and said negative than positive; there was no malice going over that handful of papers, and ap-of manner and speech which keeps up one's proximating to the sum total, in that kind of outer surface of habitual affection toward a awful arithmetic when figures cease to be mere person long after all its foundations of trust figures, but grow into avenging monsters, bear- and respect have hopelessly crumbled away. ing with them life or death.

said Hilary at last, pointing to the whole than I. And he must be managed somehow, meet, he would have recrossed the Indian seas! "Ah, that's it. I'm just careless, and so I present—in order to save her from them all. |balance my books every week—every day if The minute history of this painful day I do you like—exactly as you do at that horrid

ed. How is it to be met? Think for your-

" What idea?"

"I'll borrow the money from old Ascott." "That means, because he has already given,

But Ascott only burst out laughing. "Non-and her little feminine figure seeming to grow "Had to do? Oh, Aunt Hilary, I'm so taller as she spoke-"I'll tell you, since you tired! can't you let me be quiet? Only this don't seem yourself to understand it. Because one night. I promise to bring you everything a young man, with health and strength in him, should blush to eat any bread but what "Monday will be too late. I shall be away. he himself earns. Because he should work And you know you can't do without my ex- at any thing and every thing, stint himself of cellent arithmetic," she added with a faint every luxury and pleasure, rather than ask or smile. "Now, Ascott, be a good boy-fetch borrow, or, except under rare circumstances, down all those bills and let us go over them rather than be indebted to any living soul for a single half-penny. I would not, it I were a

"What a nice young man you would make,

Aunt Hilary.!"

"Yes. But the ring sold for fifty." And There was something in the lad's impertur-Hilary drew to the table, got writing materials, bable good humor at once irritating and disprepense about him, no absolute personal The aunt and nephew spent some time in wickedness. And he had the strange charm

"Come now, my pretty aunt must go with "Is that all! You are quite sure it is all?" me. She will manage the old ogre much better

It's all very fine talking of independence, but crimson-atmosphered apartment. She as well isn't it hard that a poor fellow should be living as her neighbors liked pretty things about her, in constant dread of being carried off to that soft, harmonious colors to look at and wear, horrid, uncleanly, beastly den—bah! I don't well-cooked food to eat, cheerful rooms to live like thinking of it—and all for the want of in. It she could have had all these luxuries only asking for Ascott's quarterly allowance things that he possesses;" and though hers three days in advance, for it was due on Tues- was outwardly so dark, so full of poverty, day. But what jarred against her proud, hon-anxiety, and pain, still she knew that inwardly est epirit was the implication that such a it owned many things, one thing especially, request gave of taking as a right that which which no money could buy, and without which had been so long bestowed as a favor. Nothing fine houses, fine furniture, and fine clothes but the great strait they were in could ever indeed, all the comforts and splendors of exhave driven her to consent that Mr. Ascott istence, would be worse that valueless, actual should be applied to at all; but since it must torment. So as she looked around her she be done, she felt that she had better do it her-felt not the slightest envy of her sister Selina. self. Was it from some lurking doubt or dread Nor of honest Peter, who rose up from his that Ascott might not speak the entire truth, arm-chair, pulling the yellow silk handkeras she had insisted upon its being spoken, be-chief from his sleepy face, and, it must be confore Mr. Ascott was asked for any thing? fessed, receiving his future connections very since whatever he gave must be given with a willingly, and even kindly. full knowledge on his part of the whole pitiable state of affairs.

der because he never seemed to suspect it, but man's complaisant pomposities, were they to talked and laughed with her as usual—that explain that they had come a begging, asking she took her nephew's arm and walked silently him, as the climax to his liberalities, to adthrough the dark squares, perfectly well a vare vance a few pounds in order to keep the young that he only asked her to go with him in order man whom he had for years generously and to do an unpleasant thing which he did not sufficiently maintained out of prison? This, like to do himself, and that she only went with smooth it over as one might, was, Hilary felt, him in the character of watch, or supervisor, the plain English of the matter, and as minute to try and save him from doing something after minute lengthened, and nothing was said which she herself would be ashamed should of their errand, she sat upon thorns. be done.

Yet he was ostensibly the head, hope, and nuts quite composedly. stay of the family. Alas! many a family has to submit to, and smile under an equally mel-" Mr. Ascott, I want to speak to you." ancholy and fatal sham.

CHAPTER XVII.

Mr. Ascorr was sitting half asleep in his solitary dining room, his face rosy with wine, while Ascott busied himself over his walnuts his heart warmed also, probably from the same | —he had the grace to look excessively uncom--that low word applicable only to low people, bitter truth. and not men of property, who have a right to Mr. Ascott listened, apparently without surenjoy all the good things of this life. He was prise, and any how, without comment. scarcely even "merry," merely "comforta-self-important loquacity ceased, and his conble," in that cozy, benevolent state which descending smile passed into a sharp, reticent, middle aged or elderly gentlemen are apt to fall business look. He knitted his shaggy brows, into after a good dinner and good wine, when contracted that coarsely-hung, but resolute they have no mental resources, and the said mouth, in which lay the secret of his success good dinner and good wine constitutes their in life, buttoned up his coat, and stuck his best notion of felicity.

Hilary herself was not insensible comfortable splendors about him—a man who to the pleasantness of this warm, well-lit, had made his own money, hardly and honest-twenty pounds? You must go to him, Aunt with those she loved to share them, no doubt she would have been much hannier. But yet She saw they must—there was no help for she felt to the full that solemn truth that "a Even Johanna said so. It was after all man's life consisteth not in the abundance of

Now how was he to be told? she and Ascott sat over the wine and desert It was with a strange, sad feeling—the sad-he had ordered for them, listening to the rich

But Ascott drank his wine and ate his wal-

At last Hilary said, in a sort of desperation,

"With pleasure, my dear young lady. you come to my study?—I have a most elcgantly furnished study, I assure you. any affair of yours—"

"Thank you, but it is not mine; it concerns my nephcw here."

And then she braced up all her courage, and Not that he was in the least "tipsy" fortable—she told, as briefly as possible, the hands behind him over his coat-tails. Yet wealth and comfort are not things to stood there on his own hearth, with all his ly, who from the days when he was a poor it from his footman's hands, it was one of imerrand-lad had had no one to trust to but him- portance. He made some sort of rough apolself, yet had managed always to help himself, ogy, drew the writing materials to him, wrote ay, and others too-Hilary's stern sense of one or two business-looking letters, and made justice contrasted him with the graceful young out one or two more checks. man who sat opposite to him, so much his "Here's your's Ascott; take it, and let me inferior, and so much his debtor. She owned have done with it," said he, throwing it across that Peter Ascott had a right to look both con-the table folded up. "Can't waste time on it," said he.

And there he stopped. In his business ca- quarter of an hour." pacity he was too acute a man to be a man of were kept to himself.

temptuously and displeased.

heart, and even Ascott played with his wine ters dispatched. Mr. Ascott rose, and adminglass in a nervous kind of way-"you want istering a short, sharp homily, tacitly dismissmoney, and you think I'm sure to give it, be-ed his visitors. Whether this silence was cause it wouldn't be pleasant just now to have sullenness, cowardice, or shame, Hilary could discreditable stories going about concerning not guess. the future Mrs. Ascott's relatives. You're She quitted the house with a sense of grind-quite right, it wouldn't. But I'm too old a ing humiliation almost intolerable. But still bird to be caught with chaff for all that. You the worst was over: the money had been must rise very early in the morning to take begged and given-there was no fear of a mc in."

"That's not fair, Mr. Ascott. We do not take Ascott would be indebted to his godfather, you in. Have we not told you the whole Perhaps this total cessation of extraneous help truth? I was determined you should know it might force the young man upon his own rebefore we asked you for one farthing of your sources, compel his easy temperament into money. It there were the smallest shadow of active energy, and bring out in him those dora chance for Ascott in any other way, we mant qualities that his aunts still fondly hoped never would have come to you at all. It is a existed in him.

horrible, horrible humiliation!" sometimes occurs in a hard man's life, when, I know." if the right touch comes, he becomes malleable.

girl, and said, in quite a gentle way,

of my money."

He wrote the memorandum of the check these appointments are easy enough to be had. inside the page, then tore off the cheek itself. Why not try? Any thing; we will consent and proceeded to write the words "Twenty to any thing, if only we can see your life busy pounds," date it, and sign it. fingering over and useful and happy." the signature, as it he had a certain prote in Thus she talked, feeling far more tenderly, the honest name "Peter Ascott," and was to him in his forlorn despondency than when and elsewhere. not a bad signature, nor would be easily forg- to have come over him, which, when they cd. One can not be too careful over - What's reached home and met Aunt Johanna's silentthat? a letter, John?"

By his extreme eagerness, almost snatching care indifference.

such small transactions. Ma'am, excuse me,

"A very pretty story, but I almost expected but five thousand pounds depends on my getting these letters written and sent off within a

Hilary bent her head, and sat watching the many words, and his feelings, if they existed, pen scratch, and the clock tick on the mantlepiece: thinking if this really was to be the last "It all comes to this, young man," he con- of his godfather's allowance; what on earth tinued, after an uncomfortable pause, in which would become of Ascott? For Ascott himself, Hilary could have counted every beat of her he said not a word. Not even when, the let-prison. And spite of every thing, Hilary felt Hilary started up in an agony of shame, a certain relief that this was the last time

"Don't be down-hearted, Ascott," she said; It might be that Peter Ascott had a soft "we will manage to get on somehow till you place in his heart, or that this time, just be-tiear of a practice, and then you must work-tore his marriage, was the one crisis which work like a 'brick,' as you call it. You will, ever after; but he looked kindly at the poor; "I won't let you give in, my boy," she went on, kindly. 👉 Who would ever dream "Don't vex yourself, my dear. I shall give of giving in at your age, with health and the young fellow what he wants: nobody ever strength, a good education, and no incumcalled Peter Ascott stingy. But he has cost brances whatever-not even aunts! for we me enough already: he must shift for himself will not stand in your way, be sure of that. now. If and me over that check-book, Ascott: If you can not settle here, you shall try to get but remember this is the last you'll ever see out abroad, as you have sometimes wished, as an army surgeon or a ship's doctor; you say well aware of its monetary value on 'Change they had quitted the house two hours before. But Ascott took not the slightest notice. "There, Miss Halary, I tlatter myself that's strange fit of sullenness or depression seemed ly-questioning face, changed into devil-may-

He answered nothing.

"Oh yes, aunt, we've done it; we've got|they passed through Hilary's mind, as some-soon as I like."

the sort: it is only that Ascott must now de- he was in no state of mind to be argued with. pend upon himself, and not upon his godfather. "I can not explain, Ascott, why it is that Take conrage," she added, and went up to any of us are what we are, and why things him and kissed him on the forehead: "we'll happen to us as they do: it is a question we never let our boy go to the dogs! and as for none of us understand, and in this world never this disappointment, or any disappointment shall. But if we know what we ought to be. why it's just like a cold bath, it takes away and how we may make the best of every thing. your breath for the time, and then you rise up good or bad, that happens to us, surely that is enough without perplexing ourselves about out of it brisker and fresher than ever."

But Ascott shook his head with a fierce de any thing more." as Crossus and Las poor as a rat? Why should carelessly: he was not a young fellow likely I be put into the world to enjoy myself, and to perplex himself long or deeply about these can't? Why was I made like what I am, sort of things.

lem rose up before Hilary's imagination. The have thought the old fellow would have been ghastly spectre of that everlasting doubt, which so stupid? Look there, Aunt Hilary!" haunts even the firmest faith sometimes—and. She was so unfamiliar with checks for £20, which all the nonsense written about that poor little woman! that she did not at first mystery which, only makes darker than before—oppressed her "Ho, ho " laughed Ascott, exceedingly ament, or his circumstances? What, or more brains. I wonder whether he will remember

"Binding nature fate to fate, Leaves free the human will,"

But as Hilary's thoughts went deeper down I've taken no ill-advantage of his blunder: the question answered itself-at least as far changed this 'Twenty' into 'Seventy.' I as it ever can be answered in this narrow, fi-leasily could, and put the figures $\mathcal{L}70$ here. nite stage of being. Whose will—we dare not what a good joke!" say whose blame—is it that evil must inevita- "Had ye not better go to him at once, and bly generate evil? that the smallest wrong-have the matter put right?" doing in any human being rouses a chain of "Rubbish! I can put it right myself. results which may fatally involve other human makes no difference who fills up a check, so beings in an almost incalculable circle of that it is signed all correct. A deal you womisery? The wages of sin is death. Were men know of business!" it not so sin would cease to be sin, and holiness, But still Hilary, with a certain womanish holiness. If He, the All-holy, who for some uneasiness about money matters, and an anxinscrutable purpose saw fit to allow the exist-liety to have the thing settled beyond doubt, ence of evil, allowed any other law than this, urged him to go, in either the spiritual or material world, would "Very well; just as you like. I do believe He not be denying Himself, counteracting the you are afraid of my turning forger." necessities of His own righteous essence, to He buttoned his coat with a half sulky, half which evil is so antagonistic, that we can not defiant air, left his supper untasted, and disdoubt it must be in the end east into total an-appeared. nihilation-into the allegorical lake of fire and It was midnight before he returned. His brimstone, which is the "second death?" aunts were still sitting up, imagining all sorts Nay, do they not in reality deny Him and His of horrors, in an anxiety too great for words; holiness almost as much as Atheists do, who but when Hilary ran to the door, with the preach that the one great salvation which He natural "Oh, Ascott, where have you been?"

into heaven—instead of a salvation from sin, "Where have I been? taking a walk round from the power and love of sin, through the the Park; that's all. Can't I come and go love of God in Christ?

I tell these thoughts, because like lightning I'm horribly tired. Let me alone—do!"

the money, and now I may go to the dogs as times a whole chain of thoughts do, link after link, and because they helped her to answer "No," said Aunt Hilary, "it is nothing of her nephew quietly and briefly, for she saw

"Why should that old fellow be as rich | Ascott smiled, half contemptuously, half and then punished for it? Whose fault is "Any how, I've got £20 in my pocket, so I can't starve for a day or two. Let's see: Ay, whose? The eternal, unsolvable prob-where is it to be cashed? Hillo! who would recognize the omission of the figures "C20" at the left-hand corner. Otherwise the check was correct.

for the time being with an inexpressible dread, amused, so easily was the current of his mind Ay, why was it that the boy was what he changed. "It must have been the £5000 From his inherited nature, his temper-pending that muddled the 'cute old fellow's awful question still, who was to blame? It afterward, and come posting up to see that has sent into the world is a salvation from he pushed her aside with a gesture that was punishment—a keeping out of hell and getting almost fierce in its repulsion.

as I like, without being pestered by women?

They did let him alone. Deeply wounded, tutes real dignity or authority. She had, in Aunt Johanna took no further notice of him point of fact, no authority over him; no one than to set his chair a little closer to the fire, can have, not even parents, over a young man and Aunt Hilary slipped down stairs for more of his age, except that personal influence coals. There she found Elizabeth, who they which is the strongest sway of all. thought had long since gone to bed, sitting on She said only, with a quietness that sur-

it; I saw them."

This, then, might account for his keeping respect that a gentleman shows to a lady. out of the way till after twelve o'clock, and You must be very tired and ill, or you would also for his wild, haggard look. Hilary put not have forgotten that." aside her vague dread of some new misfortune; "I didn't; or, if I did, I beg your pardon," assured Elizadeth that all was right; he had said he, half subdued. "When are you going got wherewithal to pay every body on Monday to bed?" morning, and would be safe till then. All debtors were safe on Sunday.

troubles."

eyes of hers. She was but a servant, and yet grieved, but afraid to interfere, was moved to looks like these engraved themselves inefface-rise up and go over to him. ably on her mistress's heart, imparting the "Ascott, my dear, you are looking quite ill. comfort that all pure love gives from any one Be advised by your old auntie. Go to bed at human being to another.

And love has its wonderful rights and re-Perhaps Elizabeth, who thought her-Auntie, Auntie!" self nothing at all to her mistress, would have He caught hold of her hand; which she had marveled to know how much closer her mis-laid upon his head, looked up a minute into tress felt to this poor, honest, loving girl, whose her kind, fond face, and burst into a flood of truth she believed in, and on whose faithful-boyish tears. ness she implicitly depended, than toward her Evidently his troubles had been too much own flesh and blood, who sat there moodily for him; he was in a state of great excitement. over the hearth; deeply pitied, seduously For some minutes his sobs were almost hypcared for, but as for being confided in relied terical: then by a struggle he recovered himon, in great matters or small, his own con-self, seemed exceedingly annoyed and ashamed, cerns or theirs—the thing was impossible.

They could not even ask him—they dared night, and went to bed.

he snatched at it angrily.

be peering at it to see if it's all right? But ing bitterly how very cold it was, he crept in you can't; I've paid it away. Perhaps you'd to the fireside with a book in his hand, of like to know who to? Then you shan't. I'll which Hilary noticed he scarcely read a line. not be accountable to you for all my proceed. His aunts said nothing to him; they had ings. I'll not be treated like a baby. You'd determined not; they felt that further inter-

tion, which spurred her on to stand up for her he says-let him alone." dignity, and not submit to be insulted by her And in that sad, hopeless state they passed ence, that character and conduct alone consti- afraid, above all, to blame him less it-might the stairs, very sleepy, but watching still. prised herself—"You mistake, Ascott; I have "Is he come in?" she asked; "because no wish to interfere with you whatever; you there are more bailiffs after him. I'm sure of are your own master, and must take your own course. I only expect from you the ordinary

"Directly. Shall I light your candle also?" btors were safe on Sunday.
"Go to bed now—there's a good girl; it is a wink. I'd go mad if I went to bed. I think hard that you should be troubled with our I'll turn out and have a cigar."

His whole manner was so strange that his Elizabeth looked up with those fond gray Aunt Johanna, who had set aloof, terribly once, and forget every thing till morning."

"I wish I could; I wish I could. Oh, took up his candle, bade them a hurried good-not, in such a strange mood was he—the sim- That is, he went to his room; but they ple question, Had he seen Mr. Ascott, and heard him moving about overhead for a long had Mr. Ascott been annoyed about the check? while after; nor were they surprised that he It would not have been referred to at all had refused to rise next morning, but lay most of not Hilary, in holding his coat to dry, taken the time with his door locked, until late in his pocket book out of the breast pocket, when the afternoon, when he went out for a long walk, and did not return till supper, which he "What are you meddling with my things ate almost in silence. Then, after going up to Do you want to get at the check, and his room, and coming down again, complain-better mind what you are about, Aunt Hilary." ference would be not only useless but dangerous.

Never, in all his childish naughtiness, or "He will come to himself by-and-by; his boyish impertinence, had Ascott spoken to moods, good or bad, never last long, you know," her in such a tone. She regarded him at first said Hilary, somewhat bitterly. "But, in the with simple astonishment, then hot indigna- mean time, I think we had better just do as own nephew. But then came back upon her the last hours of that dreary Sunday—afraid her own doctrine, taught by her own experi-either to comfort him or reason with him; ant, they saw, and were scarcely surprised at itself, even as it rules the body. their loving hearts to him, as those of one principally keeping accounts; in her managea common care, and every joy a universal of the small domestic establishment connected the sudden obstinacy of a weak nature con-after day; made no blunders in her arithmeit seemed impossible either to break upon his new to all her responsibilities, she had to give silence or to force his confidence.

wrong; afterward Hilary thought the latter. ing which rests upon labor, almost seeming to Many a time she wished and wished, with a neutralize its primeval curse. bitter regret, that instead of the quiet "Good But night after night; when work was over, night, Ascott!' and the one rather cold kiss she sat alone at her sewing —the only time she on his forehead, she had flung her arms round had for it—and her thoughts went faster than his neck, and insisted on his telling out his her needle. She turned over plan after plan, whole mind to her, his nearest kinswoman, and went back upon hope after hope, that had who had been half aunt and half sister to him risen and broken like waves of the sea-noall his life. But it was not done: she parted thing happening that she had expected; the from him, as she did Sunday after Sunday, only thing which had happened, or which with a sore sick feeling of how much he might seemed to have any permanence or reality. be to her, to them all, and how little he really being two things which she had never expect-of those mistakes which sensitive people happens so, in most people's lives, until at sometimes make—it was, like all similar er-last they learn to live on from day to day, dorors, only too sorrowfully remembered and ing each day's duty within the day, and beatoned for.

CHAPTER XVIII.

no ill tidings from home. Incessant occupa-propose to Johanna when she went home next tion kept her from dwelling too much on anx-day. It would cost her something to do so, ious subjects: besides, she would not have and she had had some hesitations as to the thought it exactly right, while her time and scheme itself, until at last she threw them all her mental powers were for so many hours to the winds, as an honest-hearted, faithful per diem legally Miss Balquidder's, to waste and faithfully-trusting woman would. Her the one and weaken the other by what is plan was, that they should write to the only commonly called "fretting." Nor, carrying real friend the family had—the only good man this conscientious duty to a higher degree, she believed in-stating plainly their troubles and toward a higher Master, would she have and difficulties about their nephew: asking his dared to sit grieving overmuch over their dark advice, & possibly his help. He might know of future. And yet it was very dark. She pon-something-some opening for a young surgeon dered over what was to be done with Ascott, in India, or some temporary appointment for or whether he was still to be left to the hope-the voyage out and home, which might catch less hope of doing something for himself: how Ascott's erratic and easily attracted fancy; long the little establishment at No. 15 could give him occupation for the time being, and be kept together, or if, after Selina's marriage, at least detach him from his present life, with it would not be advisable to make some change all its temptations and dangers. that should contract expenses, and prevent Also, it might result in bringing the boy this hard separation, from Monday to Satur-again under that influence which had been so tacked her in crowds every day and every ence in the world. Was it unnatural, if, minhour; but she had generally sufficient will to gled with an earnest desire for Ascott's good, put them saide: at least till after work was was an under-lying delight that that good done, and they could neither stupefy nor par-should be done to him by Robert Lyon? dyn her. Trouble had to her been long So when her plan was made, even to the very drive him altogether astray. That he was in enough familiar to have taught her its own a state of great misery, halt sullen, half defi- best lesson—that the mind can, in degree, rule it; it was very hard not to be able to open Thus, in her business duties, which were family should always do, making every trouble ment of the two young people under her, and blessing. But in his present state of mind—with the shop, Hilary went steadily on, day scious of its weakness, and dreading control—tic, no mistakes in her housekeeping. Being her whole mind to them; and she did it: and They might have been right in this, or it was a blessing to her—the sanctified blessed at all-Selina's marriage, and her own If this silence of hers was a mistake—one engagement with Miss Balquidder. It often lieving that it is a righteous as well as a tender hand which keeps the next day's page safely

So Hilary sat, glad to have a quiet hour, not to grieve in, but to lay out the details of a plan which had been maturing in her mind THE week passed by, and Hilary received all week, and which she meant definitely to day; between Johanna and herself.

These, with equally anxious thoughts, at-Hilary devoutly believed was the best influ-

words in which she meant to unfold it to Jo- "I will explain, if you will allow me to sit hanna, and the very form in which Johanna down: bah! I've brought in sticking to me a should write the letter, she allowed herself a straw out of that confounded shaky old cab. few brief minutes to think of him-Robert One ought never to be so stupid as to go any Lyon—to call up his eyes, his voice, his smile; where except in one's own carriage. to count, for the hundreth time, how many rather a small room, Miss Hilary." months—one less than twenty-tour, so she He eyed it curiously round; and, lastly, could not say years now-it would be before with his most acute look he eved herself, as if he returned to England. Also, to speculate he wished to find out something from her when and where they would first meet, and manner, before going into further explanahow he would speak the one word—all that tions. was needful to change "liking" into "love," But she stood before him a little uneasy, and and "friend" into "wife." They had so yet not very much so. The utmost she exgrown together during so many years, not the pected was some quarrel with her sister Selina: less so during these years of absence, that it perhaps the breaking off of the match, which seemed as if such a change would hardly make would not have broken Hilary's heart at all any difference. And yet—and yet—as she events. sat and sewed, wearied with her day's labors. sad and perplexed, she thought—if only, by about!" some strange magic, Robert Lyon were stand- "Not the slightest." ing opposite, holding open his arms, ready and "Well!" said Peter Ascott, "I hardly glad to take her and all her cares to his heart, thought it: but when one has been taken in how she would cling there! how closely she as I have been, and this isn't the first time by would creep to him, weeping with joy and con-your family-" tent, neither afraid nor ashamed to let him see started from it at the sharp sound of the door-but me would have come with a police officer bell-started, blushing and trembling, as if it at his back. Look here, Miss Hilary Leafhad been Robert Lyon himself, when she knew did you ever set eyes on this before?" it was only her two young assistants whom: He took out his check book, turned delibeshe had allowed to go out to tea in the neigh-rately over the small memorandum halves of borhood. So she settled herself to her work the page, till he came to one in particular. again: put all her own thoughts by in their then hunted in his pocket book for something. little private corners, and waited for the en- "My banker sent in to-day my canceled trance and the harmless gossip of these two checks, which I don't usually go over oftener orphan girls, who were already beginning to than three months; he knew that, the scamp!" love her, and make a friend of her, and to- Hilary looked up. ward whom she felt herself quite an elderly "Your nephew, to be sure. See!" and responsible person. Poor little Hilary! He spread before her a check, the very one It seemed to be her lot always to take care of she had watched him write seven days before. somebody or other. Would it ever be that made payable to "Ascott Leaf, or bearer.' any body should take care of her?

how dearly she loved him!

it was a man's foot and a man's voice.

here? I wish to see her, on business "

At another time she would have laughed at the check again; all was clear as daylight. the manner and words, as if it were impossi- Unfortunate boy! the temptation had been ble so great a gentleman as Mr. Ascott could too strong for him. Under what sudden, inwant to see so small a person as the "person sane impulse he had acted—under what deluof the name of Leaf," except on business, sion of being able to repay in time; or of Mr. at all. She sprang up only able to articulate ered, of its being discovered after the marriage, " My sister—" well. I called at No. 15 an hour ago."

"You saw them?"

"No; I thought it unadvisable, under the er of course not having the slightest suspicion circumstances."

"What circumstances?"

"So you have really no idea what I'm come

"Mr. Ascott! will you explain yourself?" "I will, ma'am. It's a very unpleasant

Only a dream! ah, only a dream! and she business I come about; any other gentleman of any thing amiss.

and signed with the bold, peculiar signature.

So she cleared away some of her needle-"Peter Ascott." Only instead of being a work, stirred the fire, which was dropping check for twenty pounds it was for seventy.

hollow and dull, and looked up pleasantly to. Instantly the whole truth flashed upon Hilathe opening door. But it was not the girls; ry: Ascott's remark about how easily the T could be made into an S, and what a "good "Any person of the name of Leaf living joke" it would be; his long absence that night; his strange manner: his refusal to let her see

But now she was startled by his appearance Ascott's not detecting the fraud: or if discovwhen to prosecute his wife's nephew would be "Don't be frightened; your sisters are quite a disgrace to himself, could never be known. But there unmistakable was the altered check, which had been presented and paid, the bank-

"Well, isn't this a nice return for all my merest chance I might not have found it out grateful to his benefactors, a disgrace to his for three months. Oh, he's a precious young home and family. She saw only the boy rascal, this nephew of yours. His father was Ascott, with his bright looks and pleasant only a fool, but he- Do you know that this ways, whom his aunts had brought up from is a matter of forgery-forgery, ma'am," add- his cradle, and loved with all his faults-pered Mr. Ascott, waxing hot in his indignation, haps loved still. "Oh, I must go home.

Hilary uttered a bitter groan.

Yes, it was quite true. Their Ascott, their Mr. Peter Ascott possibly never had a heart, own boy, was no longer merely idle, extrava-jor it had been so stunted in its growth that it gant, thoughtless-faults bad enough, but ca-had never reached its fair development. Yet pable of being mended as he grew older: he he felt sorry in his way for the "young perhad done that which to the end of his days he son," who looked so deadly white, yet tried could never blot out. He was a swindler and so hard not to make a scene; nay, when her a torger.

She clasped her hands tightly together, as deported herself with steady composure; told one struggling with sharp physical pain, try-them that she was obliged suddenly to go ing to read the expression of Mr. Ascott's face. home, but would be back, if possible, the next At last she put her question into words.

prosecute him?"

Mr. Ascott crossed his legs, and settled his them about the shop and the house in case neckcloth with a self-satisfied air. He evident-she might be detained till Monday. ly rather enjoyed the importance of his posi- "You're not a bad woman of business," tion. To be dictator, almost of life and death, said he, with a patronizing air. "This seems to this unfortunate family was worth certainly a tidy little shop; I dare say you'll get on in fifty pounds.

"Well, I haven't exactly determined. The. money, you see, is of no moment to me, and I and went on speaking to the young woman at couldn't get it back any how. He'll never be the door. worth a half-penny, that rascal. I might "How much might your weekly receipts be prosecute, and nobody would blame me: in- in a place like this? And what salary does deed, if I were to decline marrying your sister, Miss—Miss What's-her-name give to each of and cut the whole set of you, I don't see," and you? You're the head shop-woman, I suphe drew himself up, "that any thing could be pose?" said against me. But—"

face, for he added.

I won't do any thing to harm the fellow."

cal, unnatural voice.

much good may it do him. 'Set a beggar on The impression was so horribly vivid, that ·horseback, and he'll ride to the devil,' and in when, pausing an instant in putting her books double quick time too. I won't hinder him, in their places, she heard the door bell ring I wash my hands of the young scape-grace. Hilary with difficulty repressed a scream. But he'd better not come near me again,"

"No," acquiesced Hilary, absently.

of his sharp eye, "I have already taken mea- at once that nothing dreadful had happened at sures to frighten him away, so that he may home. make himself scarce, and give neither you nor "Oh no, nothing has happened," confirmed me any farther trouble. I drove up to your the girl. "Only Miss Leaf sent me to see if door with a policeman, asked to see Mr. Leaf, you could come home to night instead of toand when I heard that he was out-a lie, of morrow. She is quite well, that is, pretty course I left word I d be back in half an well; but Mr. Leaf-' fidentially, "he will smell a rat, and make a or, Elizabeth stopped short. Peter Ascott was moonlight flitting of it, and we shall never one of her prejudices. She determined in his hear of him any more."

kindness? So cleverly done, too. But for the of him as what he was-swindler, forger, un-

This will break Johanna's heart!"

two assistants came into the one little parlor, morning. Then, in that orderly, accurate way "What do you mean to do? Shall you which Peter Ascott could both understand and appreciate, she proceeded to arrange with

She looked at him with a bewildered air,

Hilary made no answer; she scarcely heard. Perhaps, hard man as he was, be was All her mind was full of but one thing: "Nevtouched by the agony of suspense in Hilary's er see Ascott any more!" There came back upon her all the dreadful stories she had ever "Come, come, I won't disgrace your family: heard of lads who had committed forgery or some similar offense, and, in dread of punish-"Thank you!" said Hilary, in a mechani-ment, had run away in despair, and never been heard of for years—come to every kind of "As for my mone, he's welcome to it, and misery, perhaps even destroyed themselves.

But it was no messenger of dreadful tidings. it was only Elizabeth Hand; and the quiet "In fact," said Mr. Ascott, with a twinkle fashion in which she entered showed Hilary Depend upon it," and he winked con- Here, catching sight of Miss Hilary's visitpresence to let out no more of the family affairs.

"Never hear of Ascott any more?" repeated On his part, Mr. Ascott had always treated Hilary; and for an instant she ceased to think Elizabeth as people like him usually do treat servants, atraid to lose an inch of their dignity, "Come, my wench, you'd better tell; it'll lest it should be an acknowledgment of equal be none the worse for you, and it shan't harm birth and breeding with the class from which the young fellow, though I dare say he has they are so terribly ashamed to have sprung. paid you well for holding your tongue." He regarded her now with a lordly air.

"Young woman—I believe you are the young woman who this afternoon told me that told him I had called, eh? Servants get to Elizabeth turned round indignantly. Sir; I don't tell fibs. He was out."

came in?"

"Yes, Sir."

"And what did he say, eh?"

" Nothing."

This was the literal fact; but there was something behind which Elizabeth had not the slightest intention of communicating. In covery must have come. Ascott must have fact, she set herself, physically and mentally, known or guessed that Mr. Ascott had found in an attitude of dogged resistance to any him out; he must have confessed all to his pumping of Mr. Ascott; for though, as she had Aunt, or Johanna would never have done two truly said, nothing special had happened, she things which her sister knew she strongly distelt sure that he was at the bottom of some-liked—sending Elizabeth wandering through thing which had gone wrong in the household London at night, and fetching Hilary home that afternoon.

When Ascott returned, and ting quietly at their tea! It was this. she told him of his godfather's visit, the young man had suddenly turned so ghastly pale that dreadful. Johanna saw comfort through it she had to fetch him a glass of water; and his all. Vague hopes arose in Hilary also; vi-Aunt Johanna-Miss Selina was out-had to sions of the poor sinner sitting "clothed and tend him and soothe him for several minutes in his right mind," contrite and humbled; before he was right again. When at last he comforted by them all, with the inexpressible seemed returning to his natural self, he look-tenderness with which we yearn over one who ed wildly up at his aunt, and clung to her in "was dead and is alive again, was lost, and is such an outburst of feeling, that Elizabeth had found;" helped by them all in the way that thought it best to slip out of the room. It was women—some women especially, and these tea time, but still she waited outside for a half were of them—seem formed to help the erring hour or longer, when she gently knocked, and and unfortunate; for, erring as he was, he had after a minute or two Miss Leaf came out. also been unfortunate.

There seemed nothing wrong, at least not Many an excuse for him suggested itself. much—not more than Elizabeth had noticed How foolish of them, ignorant women that many and many a time after talks between they were, to suppose that seventeen years of Ascott and his aunts.

I want you to start at once for Kensington to gers of London life; of any life where a young fetch Miss Hilary. Don't frighten her—mind man is left to himself in a great town, with that Elizabeth. Say I am much as usual my-his temptations so many, and his power of reself; but that Mr. Leaf is not quite well, and sistance so small. I think she might do him good. Remember the exact words."

The girl was neither sullen nor rude, yet evi-complete reformation? dently quite independent; afraid neither of her So in the strange way in which, after a great mistress, nor of himself. He was sharp enough shock, we begin to revive a little, to hope against to see that whatever he wanted to get out of hope, to see a slender ray breaking through the Elizabeth must be got in another way.

"About what, sir?"

"Oh! you know what happened when you Mr. Leaf was out. It was a fib, of course." know all about their master's affairs."

"Mr. Leaf isn't my master, and his affairs are nothing to me; I don't pry into 'em," re-"Did you give him my message when he plied Elizabeth. "If you want to know any thing, Sir, handn't you better ask himself? He's at home to-night. I left him and my missus going to their tea."

"Left them at home, and at tea?"

"Yes, Miss Hilary."

It was an inexpressible relief. For the disbefore the time. Yet they had been left sit-

Perhaps, after all, the blow had not been so the most careful bringing up could, with his "I'll take the tea in myself," she said; "for temperament, stand against the countless dan-

And this might not, could not be a deliberate act. It must have been committed under Elizabeth did, and would have delivered a sudden impulse, to be repented of for the rest them accurately, if Mr. Ascott had not been of his days. Nay, in the strange way in which present, and addressed her in that authorita- our sins and mistakes are made not only the tive manner. Now, she resolutely held her whips to scourge us, but the sicknesses out of which we often come—suffering and weak in-Mr. Ascott might in his time have been ac-'deed, but yet relieved, and fresh, and sound—

customed to cringing, frightened, or imperti-who could tell but that this grave fault, this nent servants, but this was a phase of the actual guilt, the climax of so many lesser erspecies with which he was totally unfamiliar. rors, might not work out in the end Ascott's stairs, and she would be ready directly.

darkness, Hilary composed herself, at least so

go home at once," said she.

rather flattered by her involuntary appeal, fused her faculties. She felt capable of no and by an inward consciousness of his own consecutive thought, but found herself stupidexceeding generosity. "And pray don't dis-ly watching the two lines of faces, wondering, turb yourselves. Tell your sister from me - absently, what sort of people they were; what your sister Selina, I mean-that I overlook were their lives and histories; and whether every thing, on condition that you keep him they all had, like herself, their own personal

-a fellow who could - Look you, Miss Hil-ry knocked at the door of No. 15. ary, when his father sent to me to beg ten Miss Leaf opened it; but for the first time pounds to bury his mother with, I did bury in her life she had no welcome for her child. her, and him also, a month after, very respect- "Is it Ascott? I thought it was Ascott," ably too, though he had no claim upon me, she cried, peering eagerly up and down the except that he came from Stowbury. And listreet. bred in the bone will come in the flesh. He cold.

"God forbid!" said Hilary, solemnly. And ed him. But he can not be long? Is not that again she felt the strong conviction, that man he?" whatever his father had been, or his mother. of whom they had heard nothing till she was net. Johanna stepped out into the cold, damp years of his childhood and early boyhood with but in vain. his three aunts at Stowbury without gaining "I'll walk round the Crescent once, and mayat least some good, which might counteract be I shall find him. Only go in, Johanna." rearing in a new generation.

for a cab for me?"

Hilary mechanically rang the ell, and gave home.

the order.

suppose you always travel by omnibus?"

knew what, except that it was a declining of attempting to do nothing, only listening; thinkall these benevolent attentions. At last sheling every sound was a step on the pavement got Mr. Ascott outside the street door, and lor a knock at the door. Alas! what would returning, put her hand to her head with a they not have given for the fiercest knock, the

"Oh, Miss Hilary. Jon't look like that!"

" Elizabeth, do yoo ke ooy what has angeon

" No."

you must never try to find it out; for it is a of them should ever see his face again. secret that ought to be kept strictly within she reproached herself as being the cause of the family. Are you to be trusted?"

"Yes, Miss Hilary."

haste and go home."

They walked down the gas-lit Kensington that miserable family.

far as to enable her to bid Elizabeth go down High Street, Hilary taking her servant's arm; for she felt strangely weak. As she sat in the "I think it is the best thing I can do-to dark corner of the omnibus she tried to look things in the face, and form some definite plan; "Certainly, my dear," replied Mr. Ascott, but the noisy rumble at once dulled and conout of my sight, that young blackguard!" hurden of woe. Which was, alas! the one "Don't, don't!" cried Hilai, piteously. fact that never need be doubted in this world.

"Well, I won't, though it's his right name. It was nigh upon eleven o'clock when Hilastood godfather to the child, and I've done "If I is gone out, then? When did he go?" my duty by him. But mark my words, what's asked Hilary, feeling her heart turn stone-was born in a prison, and he'll die in a prison." "Just after Selina came in. She-she vex-

An I just as she was, without shawl or bondead, Ascott could not have lived all these night, and strained her eyes into the darkness;

the hereditary evil; as such evil can be conn- And Hilary was away again into the dark, teracted, even as hereditary disease can be walking rapidly, less with the hope of finding gradually removed by wholesome and careful Ascott than to get time to calm herself, so as to meet, and help her sisters to meet, this "Well, I'll not say any more," continued worst depth of their calamity. For something Peter Ascott: "only the sooner the young warned her that this last desperation of a fellow takes himself off the better. He'll weak nature is more to be dreaded than any only plague you all. Now, can you send out overt obstinacy of a strong one. She had a conviction that Ascott never would come

e order.

After a while they gave up waiting and "I'll take you to town with me if you like, watching at the front door, and shut them-It'll save you the expense of the omnibus. I selves up in the parlor. The first explanation past, even Selina ceased talking; and they Hilary answered something, she hardly sat together, the three women, doing nothing, most impatient, angry footstep, if only it had been their boy's?

About one o'clock, Selina had to be put to thed in strong hysterics. She had lashed her nephew with her bitter tongue till he had "Then I don't want you to know. And rushed out of the house, declaring that none fall, and fell into an agony of remorse, which engrossed her sisters' whole care; until her "Now, get me my bonnet, and let us make violent emotion having worn itself out, she went to sleep, the only one who did sleep in

For Elizabeth also, having been sent to bed misery—the family disgrace. To the second, hours before, was found by Miss Hilary sit-similar and even stronger reasons applied. ting on the kitchen stairs, about four in the There was something about the cool, mattermorning. Her mistress made no attempt at of-fact, business-like act of setting a detective reproach, but brought her into the parlor to officer to hunt out their nephew, from which share the silent watch, never broken except these poor women recoiled. Besides, impressto make up the fire or light a fresh candle : ed as he was-he had told his Aunt Johanna till candles burned up, and shutters were open-so-with the relentlessness of Mr. Ascott, ed, and upon their great calamity stared the might not the chance of his discovering that broad unwelcome day.

CHAPTER XIX.

itials of the alphabet—we read these sort of her younger sister only laughed—laughed as advertisements in the newspapers: and unless much as she could—if only to keep Johanna there happens to be in them something in-quiet. tensely pathetic, comical, or horrible, we Yet she herself had few fears. For she think very little about them. Only those who knew that Ascott was, in a sense, too cowardhave undergone all that such an advertise-by to kill himself. He so disliked physical ment implies can understand its depth of pain, physical unpleasantness of all kinds, misery: the sudden missing of the person out She felt sure he would stop short, even with of the home circle, whether going away in the razor or the pistol in his hand, rather anger or driven away by terror or disgrace; than do a thing so very disagreeable. the hour after hour and day after day of ago. Nevertheless, in spite of herself, while she nized suspense; the self-reproach, real or and her sisters sat together, hour after hour, . imaginary, lest any thing might have been in a stillness almost like that when there is a said or done that was not said or done-any death in the house, these morbid terrors took thing prevented that was not prevented; the a double size. Hilary ceased to treat them as gnawing remorse for some cruel, or careless, ridiculous impossibilities, but began to argue or bitter word, that could so easily have been them out rationally. The mere act of doing avoided.

Alas: if people could only be made to feel ledgment that she was fighting not with chithat every word, every action carries with it meras but realities. the weight of an eternity; that the merest "It is twenty-four hours since he went," chance may make something said or done she reasoned. "If he had done anything desquite unpremeditatedly, in vexation, sullen- perate he would have done it at once, and we ness, of spite, the last action, the last word: should have heard of it long before now; ill which may grow into an awful remembrance, news always travels fast. Besides, his name rising up between them and the irredeemable was marked on all his clothes in full. I did past, and blackening the future for years! It myself. And his coat pockets were always had committed suicide, and that she had been as soon as he got them, you know." the cause of it. This conviction she impress- And at this small remembrance of one of ed incessantly on her two sister's as they wait- his "ways," even though it was an unkind ed upon her, or sat talking by her tedside way, and had caused them many a pain, from during that long Saturday, when there was the want of confidence it showed, his poor, nothing else to be done.

thing to be done. They had not the slightest ed such an unconscious admission that his life clew to Ascott's haunts or associates. With with them was over and done; that he never the last fingering of honest shame, or honest would either please them or vex them any respect for his aunt-, he had kept all these more. things to himself. To search for him in wide

London was altogether impossible.

he was hunted drive him to desperation?

Hardly to suicide. Hilary steadfastly disbelieved in that. When Selina painted horrible pictures of his throwing himself off Waterloo Bridge: or being found hanging to a tree in one of the parks; or locking himself in a "Missing"—"Lost"—"To—"—all the in- hotel bed chamber and blowing out his brains, so made her recoil: for it seemed an acknow-

Selina was quite sure her unhappy nephew stuffed with letters; he used to cram them in fond aunts turned aside to hide their starting That was the misery of it. There was no tears. The very phrase "he used to," seem-

Yet they took care that during the whole day every thing should be done as if he were Two courses suggested themselves to Hilary expected minute by munute: that Elizabeth one, to go and consult Miss Balquidder: should lay the fourth knife and fork at dinner, the other-which came into her mind from the fourth cup and saucer at tea. Elizabeth, some similar case she had heard of—to set on who throughout had faithfully kept her pledge: foot inquiries at all police stations. But the who went about silently and unobservantly. first idea was soon rejected; only at the last and by every means in her power put aside entremity could she make rateut the family the curiosity of Mrs. Jones as to what could be night, and what on earth had become of young him, as if he were drowning, and she were the Mr. Leaf.

ed to go to bed; and then Hilary, left to her lefter! But that seemed impossible, until, own responsibility, set herself to consider how turning over scheme after scheme, she sudlong this dreadful quietness was to last, wheth-denly thought of the one which so many peoer nothing could be done. She could endure ple had tried in similar circumstances, and whatever was inevitable, but it was against which she remembered they had talked over her nature as well as her conscience to sit and laughed over, they and Ascott, one Sundown tamely to endure any thing whatsoever day evening not so very long ago. This was till it did become inevitable.

which a certain sense of honor, as well as the his attention and yet escape publicity, was tear of vexing him should be come home, had very great, especially as his initials were so hitherto prevented the examining of Ascott's common. Hundreds of "A. L.'s" might be room, drawers, clothes, and papers. It was a wandering away from home, to whom all that very dreary business—almost like doing the she dared say to call Ascott back would equallike to a person who was dead, only without ly apply. At last a bright thought struck her. the sad sanctity that belongs to the dead, "A. leaf" (will a small /) "will be quite whose very errors are forgotten and forgiven, safe wherever found. Come. Saturday. 15." any more.

ed at—things which stabbed her to the heart, such a ghastly fashion in the very midst of things that she never told, not even to Johan-great misery. She burst into uncontrollable na; but she found no clew whatever to Ascott's laughter, fit after fit; so violent that Elizabeth. whereabouts, intentions, or connections. One who came in by chance, was territied out of thing, however, struck her—that most of his her wits, and kneeling beside her mistress, imclothes, and all his somewhat extensive stock plored her to be quiet. At last the paroxysm of jewelry were gone; every thing, in short, ended in complete exhaustion. The tension that could be convertible into money. It was of the last twenty-four hours had given way. evident that his flight, sudden as it was, had and Hilary knew her strength was gone. Yet been premeditated as at least a possibility. The advertisement ought to be taken to the

the one haunting fear of his committing suicide; serted without fail on Monday morning. and made it likely that he was still lingering | There was but one person whom she could about, hiding from justice and Mr. Ascott, or trust-Elizabeth. perhaps waiting for an opportunity to escape She looked at the girl, who was kneeling from England—from the fear that his godfath-beside the sofa, rubbing her feet, and somefuture, wherever he was known.

what forlorn and far off seas his ruined life liest, wisest, and best way. might go down. He, Ascott Leaf, the last of So thought Miss Hilary as she lay watching the name and family.

"It can not be; it shall not be!" cried errand upon which she wished to send her.

the reason that her lodgers had sat up all the wretched boy and her hands to church at only one to save him. How could she do it?

After tea, Johanna, quite worn out, consent- If she could only get at him, by word or l it did become inevitable.

—a Times adventisement.

In the first place, she determined on that The difficulty how to word it, so as to catch who can neither suffer nor make others suffer. As she wrote it—this wretched double-entendre—she was seized with that sudden sense Many things she found, and more she guess- of the ludicrous which sometimes intrudes in This so far was satisfactory. It took away Times office that very night, in order to be in-er, even if not prosecuting him, had the power times casting a glance round, in the quiet way and doubtless the will completely to crush his of one well used to nursing, who can find out how the sufferer is without "fussing" with Where could be go? His Aunt tried to questions. She noticed, probably because she think over every word he had ever let fall had seen little of her of late, a curious change about America, Australia, or any other place in Elizabeth. It must have been gradual, but to which the hopeless outlaws of this country yet its result had never been so apparent befly; but she could recollect nothing to enable fore. Her brusqueness had softened down. her to form any conclusion. One thing only and there had come into her and shone out of she was sure of—that if once he went away, her, spite of all her natural uncomeliness of his own words would come true: they would person, that beautiful, intangible something, never see his face again. The last tie, the last common alike to peasant and queen, as clear constraint that bound him to home and a to see and as sad to miss in both-womanlisteady, righteons life would be broken: he ness. Added thereto was the gentle compowould go all adrift, be tossed hither and thither sure of mein which almost invariably accomon every wave of circumstance—what he call-panied it, which instinctively makes you feel ed circumstance—till Heaven only knew what that in great things or small, whatever the a total wreck he might speedily become, or in woman has to do. she will do it in the woman-

her servant, and then explained to her the

Hilary. A sharp, bitter cry of resistance to Not much explanation, for she merely gave the death; and her heart seemed to go out to her the advertisement to read, and told her what she wished done with it. And Elizabeth, ed her eyes, and flushed her cheeks, and made on her part, asked no questions, but simply her old nervousness of manner return.

listened and obeyed.

passive and motionless. Her strength and had to tell her mistress every thing, and the activity seemed to have collapsed at once into lear to trouble her, at this troublous time, that heavy quietness which comes when one with any small matter that merely concernhas endured to the utmost limit of endurance, ed herself. when one feels as if to speak a word or to lift,

she thought.

By-and-by sleep did come, and she was taken far away out of these miseries. By the strange noticed him, till on his talking to the clerk apeculiarity of dreams that we so seldom dream bout some misprint in his advertisement, apabout any grief that oppresses us at the time. but generally of something quite different, she Places." her ear was caught by the unmistakthought she was in some known unknown land, lovely and beautiful, with blue hills rising in the distance, and blue seas creeping and curling on to the shore. On this shore she was walking with Robert Lyon, just as he used to be, with his true face and honest voice. He did not talk to her much; but she felt him there, and knew they had but "one heart between them." A heart which had never once swerved, either from the other: a heart who'e and sound, into which the least unfaith had never come—that had never known, or recog nized even as a possibility, the one first doubt, the ominous

"Little rift within the lute. That by-and-by will make the music mute, And ever widening slowly silence all."

bring the faithful man to the faithful woman young nor so simple as she had at first and make them love one another with a right thought. She drew back, very much ashameous, holy, persistent tenderness, which dare ed, and coloring deeply.
look in His face, nor be as amed; which sees Now, if Elizabeth ever looked any thing look in His face, nor be ashamed; which sees in this life only the beginning of the life to like comely, it was when she blushed; for she come; and in the closest, most passionate hu had the delicate skin peculiar to the young man love something to be held with a loose women of her district; and when the blood hand, something frail as glass and britile as rushed through it, no check of lady fair ever straw, unless it is perfected and sanctified by assumed a brighter rose. That, or the natuthe love divine?

Hilary at least believed so. And when at caught the youth's attention. Elizabeth's knock she woke with a start, and saw-not the sweet sea-shore and Robert Lyon, Perhaps 1'm going your way? Would you but the dull parlor, and the last flicker of the like company home?" fire, she thanked God that her dream was not all a dream-that, sharp as her misery was, great dignity. it did not touch this—the love of her heart:

she believed in Robert Lvon still.

And so she rose and spoke quite cheerfully, asking Elizabeth how she had managed, and do you come from Stowbury?" whether the advertisement would be sure to be in on Monday morning.

right."

which was the fact.

new thing in her monotonous life; it brighten-little for her, and his mother was a decidedly tespecially as she was somewhat perplexed, be-After she was gone Hilary lay on the sofa ing divided in her mind between the wish she

The matter was this. When she had given a finger would be as much as life was worth. in her advertisement at the Times office, and "Oh, if I could only go to sleep!" was all was standing behind the counter waiting for her change and receipt, there stood beside her a young man, also waiting. She had hardly parently one of the great column of "Want able Stowbury accent.

It was the first time she had heard it since she left home, and to Elizabeth's tenacious nature home in absence had gained an additional charm, had grown to be the one place in the world about which her affections clung. In these dreary wilds of London, to hear a Stowbury tongue, to catch sight of a Stowbury person, or even one who might know Stowbury, made her heart leap up with a bound of joy. She turned suddenly, and looked intently at the young man, or rather the lad, for he seemed a mere lad, small, slight, and whiskerless.

"Well, Miss. I hope you'll know me again next time." said the young fellow. At which Is it ever so in this world? Does God ever remark Elizabeth saw that he was neither so ral vanity of man in being noticed by woman,

"Come now, Miss, don't be shy or offended.

"No. thank you," said Elizabeth, with "Well, won't von even tell a fellow your name? Mine's Tom Cuffe, and I live-"

"Cliffe! Are you little Tommy Cliffe, and

And all Elizabeth's heart was in her eyes.

As has been said, she was of a specially "Yes, Miss Hilary; it is sure to be all tenacious nature. She liked few people, but those she did like she held very fast. And then the girl hung about the room in the only strong interest of her life, except Miss an uneasy way, as if she had something to tell, Hilary, had been the little boy whom she had snatched from under the horse's heels; and Elizabeth had had an adventure. It was a though he was rather a scape-grace, and cared objectionable woman, she had clung to them | "little Tommy Cliffe." Why not?

both firmly till she lost sight of them.

Now it was not to be expected that she should recognize in this London stranger the rand: torgotten even Miss Hilary. It was little lad whose life she had saved-a lad, too, not till Tom Cliffe asked her where she lived, from her beloved Stowbury-without a certain that she suddenly recollected her mistress amount of emotion, at which the individual in might not like, under present circumstances, question broadly stared.

Stowbury, sure enough. Who are you?"

" Elizabeth Hand."

Tom declared he should have known ple; but she felt she ought not, and she would her any where, and had never forgotten her-|not. never! How far that was true or not, he certainly looked as if it were; and two great do just as well; at least till I speak to my

"You've grown a man now, Tommy," said she, looking at him with a sort of half-maternal pride, and noticing his remarkably hand my Clifie as her "follower" seemed so very some and intelligent face, so intelligent that it fanny. would have attracted notice, though it was are you?" .

"I'm nineteen, I think."

are growing!" said Elizabeth, with a smile.

Then she asked after Mrs. Cliffe, but got half over London. only the brief answer, "Mother's dead," given in a tone as if no more inquiries would be welcome. His two sisters, also, had died of typhus in one week, and Tom had been "on his own hook," as he expressed it, for the last three years.

He was extremely frank and confidential; told how he had begun life as a printer's "devil," afterward become a compositor, and his health failing, had lett the trade, and gone as servant to a literary gentleman.

"An uncommon clever fellow is master: keeps his carriage, and has dukes to dinner. all out of his books. Maybe you've heard of not even mention any body's name." them, Elizabeth?" and he named a few, in a patronizing way; at which Elizabeth smiled. patronizing way: at which Elizabeth smiled. But oh, the bitterness of knowing, and feel-for she knew them well. But she neverthelessing sure Elizabeth knew too, the thing for regarded with a certain awe the servant of so which she thanked her; and that not to mengreat a man, and "little Tommy Cliffe" took tion Ascott's name was the greatest kindness a new importance in her eyes.

Also, as he walked with her along the family. street to find an omnibus, she could not help perceiving what a sharp little fellow he had grown into; how, like many another printer's boy, he had caught the influence of the atmosphere of letters, and was educated, selfeducated, of course, to a degree far beyond his position. When she looked at him, and listhad raised themselves from the ink-pot and of any kind reached the anxious women. the compositor's desk to fame and eminence, and she funcied that such might be the lot of haps feeling that the scape-grace would be safer how excessively proud she should be!

For the moment she had forgotten her erthat their abode or any thing concerning them "Bless your heart, I am Tommy Cliffe from should be known to a Stowbury person.

It was a struggle. She would have liked to see the lad again; have liked to talk over Whereupon ensued a most friendly greet-with him Stowbury things and Stowbury peo-

"Tell me where you live, Tom, and that will tears of pleasure dimmed Elizabeth's kind mistress. I never had a visitor before, and my mistress might not like it."

"No followers allowed, eh?"

Elizabeth laughed. The idea of little Tom-

So she bade him good by; having, thanks set upon broad, stooping shoulders, and a to his gay frankness, been made acquainted small, slight body. "Let me see; how old with all about him, but leaving him in perfect ignorance concerning herself and her mistress. She only smiled when he declared contemptu-"And I'm two and twenty. How aged we ously, and with rather a romantic emphasis, that he would hunt her out, though it were

This was all her adventure. When she came to tell it, it seemed very little to tell, and Miss Hilary listened to it rather indifferently, trying hard to remember who Tommy Cliffe was, and to take an interest in him because he came from Stowbury. But Stowbury days were so far off now-with such a gulf or pain between.

Suddenly the same fear occurred to her that had occurred to Elizabeth.

"The lad did not see the advertisement, 1 hope? You did not tell him about us?"

"I told him nothing," said Elizabeth, speaking softly, and looking down.

"That was right; thank you."

the faithful servant could show toward the CHAPTER XX.

Ascort Leaf never came home.

Day after day appeared the advertisement, ened to him, Elizabeth involuntarily thought sometimes slightly altered, as hope or fear of Benjamin Franklin, and of many more who suggested; but no word, no letter, no answer

By-and-by, moved by their distress, or per-got rid of if found and dispatched abroad in day, as they were all sitting in the midst of some decent manner. Mr. Ascott himself took white finery, but as sadly and silently as if it measures for privately continuing the search, were a funeral, a person was suddenly shown Every outward-bound ship was examined; in "on business." every hospital visited; every case of suicide. It was a detective officer sent to find out investigated; but in vain. The unhappy from Ascott Leaf's aunts whether a certain young man had disappeared, suddenly and description of him, in a printed hand-bill, was completely, as many another has disappeared, correct. For his principal creditor, exaspeout of the home circle, and been never heard rated, had determined on thus advertising him of more.

It is difficult to understand how a family can possibly bear such a sorrow, did we not know for the three aunts could not have been more that many have had to bear it, and have borne utterly overwhelmed. They made no "scene" it, with all its load of agonizing suspense, slow- - a certain sense of pride kept these poor gen-

ly dying hope,

"The hope that keeps alive despair," and endurable.

The Leaf family went through all this. Was it better or worse for them that their an-glanced round at her sisters, but they had not guish had to be secret? that there were no a word to say. In any crisis of family diffi-friends to pity, inquire, or console? that Jo-culty they always left her to take the helm. hanna had to sit hour by hour and day by day in the solitary parlor. Selina having soon gone back to her old ways of "gadding about," trouble—the public disgrace: Mr. Ascott's and her marriage preparations: and that, anger and annoyance, not that she cared much work, work, as nothing were amiss?

hoth.'

"I am sure of it," said Hilary, with a sad smile, but entered into no explanation, and Miss Balquidder had the wise kindliness to inquire no further. Nevertheless, on some tective. errand or other she came to Kensington nearly every evening, and took Hilary back with her no way of avoiding it?"

This is a summary proceeding, no way of avoiding it?" to sleep at No. 15.

with her as much as possible till she is married," she said, as a reason for doing this.

And Hilary acquiesced, but silently, as we often do acquiesce in what ought to be a truth, but which we know to be the saddest, most painful falsehood.

of the family no more. After her first burst of age than faith—the faith which is said to self-reproachful grief she took Mr. Ascott's "remove mountains"—the belief that to the

But the danger was apparently tided over sometimes teaches how to climb over it. No news of Ascott came. Even the daily in-His Aunt Selina was beginning to breathe chance of payment is by suppressing it. freely, when, the morning before the wedding he will do that, in two days he shall hear from

in the public papers as having "abscouded."

Had a thunder-bolt fallen in the little partlewomen from betraving their misery to a strange man; though he was a very civil man, and having delivered himself of his errand, settling down into a permanent grief, compar-like an automaton, sat looking into his hat, ed to which the grief for loss by death is light and taking no notice of aught around him. He was accustomed to this sort of thing.

Hilary was the first to recover herself.

Rapidly she ran over in her mind all the hardest of all, Hilary had on the Monday for this, except so far as it would affect Selina: morning to return to Kensington and work, lastly, the death-blow it was to any possible hope of reclaiming the poor prodigal. But it was natural that all this should tell she did not believe was dead, but still fondly upon her; and one day Miss Balquidder said, trusted he would return one day from his wanafter a long covert observation of her face, derings and his swine's husks, to have the fat-"My dear, you look ill. Is there any thing ted calf killed for him and glad tears shed troubling you? My young people always tell over him. But after being advertised as "abme their troubles, bodily or mental. I doctor sconded," Ascott never would, never could. come home any home.

Taking as cool and business-like a tone as she could, she returned the paper to the de-

"One, Miss," replied the man, very respect-"Your sister Selina must wish to have you fully. "If the family would pay the debt."

"Do you know how much it is?"

"Eighty pounds."

" Ali !"

That hopeless sigh of Johanna's was sufficient answer, though no one spoke.

But in desperate cases some women acquire For Selina, it became plain to see, was one a desperate courage, or rather it is less courview of her nephew's loss-that it was a good very last there must be something to be done. riddance; went on calmly with her bridal and, if it can be done, they will have strength preparations, and seemed only afraid lest any to do it. True, the mountain may not be rething should interfere to prevent her marriage, moved, but the mere act of faith, or courage

"Very well. Take this paper back to your quiries for him by his creditors had ceased employer. He must be aware that his only paying the debt."

Hilary said this, to her sisters' utter astonishment; so utter that they let her say it, and should like to help in paying the debt, if Mr. let the detective go away with a civil "Good Ascott had no objection." And then she turnmorning," before they could interfere or con- ed back to her white splendors, and became tradict by a word.

promised? It is an impossibility."

tress- Madame, if it had been possible it vexed herself about the risk of confiding in would have been done already; if it is impos-Miss Balquidder, lest by any chance the story sible, it shall be done." It shall, I say."

tunes," said Selina, in her most querulous done until after to-morrow. She was deter-

"I'm not jesting. But where is the use of between the cup and lip. sitting down to moan! I mean what I say. The thing must be done."

set tightly together.

"If it is not done, sisters—if his public disthe man must be a coward who would refuse Miss Balquidder?" to marry a woman he cared for, even though her nearest kinsman had been hanged at the to Hilary's face. Old Bailey-but Ascott himself. The boy is not a bad boy, though he has done wickedly; name is his only guarantee against the disbut there is a difference between a wicked act honesty of ours." and a wicked nature. I mean to save him if "Hilary, you disgrace us-disgrace me-I can."

": How ?"

"By saving his good name: by paying the ney?"

"I will go to Miss Balquidder and—"

"Borrow it?"

stealing it."

Then controlling herself, Hilary explained her sister. Angry and miserable with every that she meant to ask Miss Balquidder to ar- nerve quivering, she was at war with the range for her with the creditor to pay the whole world. at Kensington.

merely that she should say, 'This young we trying to fix in her mind word for word what man is employed by me: I believe her to be she meant to say; revealing no more of the honest, respectable, and so forth; also, that family history than was absolutely necessary. when she makes a promise to pay, she will to and stating her business in the briefest, hardthe best of her power perform it. A charactest, most matter-of-fact way-putting it as a ter which is at present rather a novelty in the transaction between employer and employed, Leaf family."

" Hilary!

Why should we suffer so much! Why ry corner, minute by minute she felt herself should we be always dragged down-down- growing more herce, and hard, and cold. in this way? Why should we never have had "This will never do. I shall be wicked byany one to cherish and take care of us, like and-by. I must go in and get it over." other women! Why-"

"Because it is the will of God."

us, and we will make arrangements about | Hilary flung herself on her dear old sister's neck and burst into tears.

Selina too cried a little, and said that she absorbed in the annoyance of there being far "Paying the debt! Hilary, what have you too much clematis and far too little orange blossom in the bridal bonnet-which it was "Like the Frenchman's answer to his mis- now too late to change. A little, also, she might get round to Russell Square: and was "I wonder you can jest about our misfor-urgent that at least nothing should be said or > mined to be married, and dreaded any slip But Hilary was resolute. "I said that in two days the matter should be arranged, and Her eyes glittered-her small, red lips were so it must be, or the man will think we too break our promises."

"You can assure him to the contrary," said grace is not prevented, don't you see the re-Selina, with dignity. "In fact, why can't sult? Not as regards your marriage, Selina-you arrange with him without going at all to

Again the fierce, bitter expression returned

"You forget, Miss Balquidder's honest

speaking in such a way. Are we not gentle

"I don't know, Selina. I don't seem to know or to feel any thing, except that I would 'And where on earth shall you get the mo-live on bread and water in order to live peaceably and honestly. Oh, will it ever, ever be ?"

She walked up and down the parlor, disar-"No, never! I would as soon think of ranging the white draperies which lay about. feeling unutterable contempt for them and for eighty pounds by certain weekly or monthly This feeling lasted even when, after some installments, to be deducted from her salary discussion, she gained her point and was on her way to call on Miss Balquidder. She "It is not a very great favor to ask of her: went round and round the Square many times, in which there was no more favor asked or bestowed than could possibly be avoided. And "I am growing bitter, Johanna: I know I as the sharp east wind blew across her at eve-

Perhaps it was as well. Well for her, mo-Miss Leat laid her finger on her child's lips-rally as physically, that there should have been that sudden change from the blighting weather outside to the warm, well-lighted room where the good rich woman sat at her early week or two ago, but did not like to speak.

and solitary tea.

the centre of that large handsome parlor, with thing, and every body tells every thing to the one cup and saucer, the one easy-chair. me." And as Hilary entered she noticed, amidst all ways get to wear.

turned round, and risen, smiling.

and see me! Just the day before the wedding, Quixotic acts she had been called upon to pertoo, when you must be so busy! Sit down form during her long life, would have made a and tell me all about it. But first, my dear, novel—or several novels—such as no novelist how wet your boots are! Let me take them could dare to write, for the public would conoff at once."

with her own hands.

much surprised to resist.

Miss Balquidder had, like most folk, her and pitiful story of young Ascott Leaf. opinions or "crotchets"—as they might be— How it came out Hilary hardly knew; she and one of them was, to keep her business and seemed to have told very little, and yet Miss friendly relations entirely distinct and apart. Balquidder guessed it all. It did not appear Whenever she went to Kensington or her oth- to surprise or shock her. She neither began er establishments she was always emphatical to question nor preach; she only laid her hand, ly "the mistress"—a kindly and even moth-her large, motherly, protecting hand, on the erly mistress, certainly, but still authoritative, bowed head, saying. decided. Moreover, it was her invariable rule to treat all her employees alike—"making no poor bairn!" step-bairns" among them. Thus for some The soft Scotch tone and word—the grave, time it had happened that Hilary had been, quiet Scotch manner, implying more than it and felt herself to be, just Miss Leaf, the book even expressed—was it wonderful if underlykeeper, doing her duty to Miss Balquidder, ing as well as outside influences made Hilary her employer, and neither expecting nor at-completely give way? taining any closer relation.

the sudden apparition of that young face at the tenderest remembrance, often saying that her lonely fireside, Miss Balquidder appeared of all the ladies he had met with in the world quite different.

loudly of the woolen stockings—she saw that work of her cottage with her own hands.

effort to keep back her tears.

by instinct that they were, as Miss Balquidder of the man she loves—were speaking to her had once jokingly said of herself, specially now, comforting her and helping her-commeant to be mothers. And though, in its fort and help that it would have been sweeter strange providence. Heaven often denies the to receive from her than from any woman livmaternity, it can not and does not mean to shulling. up the well-spring of that maternal passion— A mere fancy; but in her state of long untruly a passion to such women as these, al-controlled excitement if took such possession most as strong as the passion of love—but lets of her that Hilary fell on her knees, and hid the stream, which might otherwise have bless-ther face in Miss Balquidder's lap, sobbing aed one child or one family, flow out wide and loud. far, blessing wherever it goes.

ing her on a low chair beside her own,

"My dear, you are in trouble. I saw it a Couldn't you say it out, and let me help you? Very solitary it looked—the little table in You need not be afraid. I never tell any

That was true. Added to this said motherthis comfort and luxury, the still, grave, al-lliness of hers, Miss Balquidder possessed that most sad expression which solitary people al-faculty, which some people have in a remarkable degree, and some—very good people too But the next minute Miss Balquidder had -are totally deficient in, of attracting confidence. The secrets she had been trusted with, "Miss Leaf, how very kind of you to come the romances she had been mixed up in, the demn them as impossible and unnatural. Which she did, sending for her own big But all this experience—though happily it slippers, and putting them on the tiny feet could never be put into a book—had given to the woman herself a view of human nature at Hilary submitted—in truth she was too once so large, lenient, and just, that she was the best person possible to hear the strange

"How much you must have suffered, my

Robert Lyon had had a mother, who died But in her own house, or it might be from when he was seventeen, but of whom he kept there was none equal to her—the strong, ten-A small thing touches a heart that is sore |der, womanly peasant woman-refined in mind with trouble. When the good woman rose and word and ways-though to the last day up—after patting the little feet, and approving of her life she spoke broad Scotch, and did the Hilary's whole face was quivering with the seems as if that mother—toward whom Hilary's fancy had clung, lovingly as a woman There are some woman of whom one feels ought to cling, above all others, to the mother

The other was a little surprised; it was not In a tone that somehow touched every fibre her Scotch way to yield to emotion before folk; of Hilary's heart, Miss Balquidder said, plac-but she was a wise woman, she asked no questions, merely held the quivering hands and smoothed the throbbing head, till composure "I don't quite understand." returned. Some people have a magical, mesmeric power of soothing and controlling: it know this creditor of your nephew's. He bewas hers. When she took the poor face be-ing a tailor and outfitter, we have had dealings tween her hands, and looked straight into the together in former times, and I know him to eyes, with, "There, you are better now," be a hard man, an unprincipled man, such a Hilary returned the gaze as steadily, nay, one as no young woman should have to do smilingly, and rose.

"Now, may I tell you my business?"

are in trouble, the last thing one ought to do is is the last thing I should desire for you. Let to sit down beside them and moan. Did you me suggest another way. Take me for your come to ask my advice, or had you any defi-creditor instead of him. Pay him at once, and nite plan of your own?"

" Í had." And Hilary told it.

you to think of it. But I see two strong ob-arrangement, that at first Hilary hardly perjections: first, whether it can be carried out; ceived all it implied. When slie did-when secondly, whether it ought."

Hilary shrank, sensitively.

themselves for some worthless character on earried to a morbid excess that noble indepenwhom the sacrifice is utterly wasted. I object dence which is the foundation of all true digto this, as I would object to throwing myself-nity in man or woman) she shrunk back into or my friend into a blazing house, unless I herself, overcome with annoyance and shame. were morally certain there was a life to be At last she torced herself to say, though the saved. Is there in this case?"

"I think there is! I trust in Heaven there is!" said Hilary, earnestly.

There was both pleasure and pity expressed in my life. It is quite impossible." in MissBalquidder's countenance as she replied, "Be it so: that is a matter on which no one I beg your pardon," replied Miss Balquidder, can judge except yourself. But on the other also somewhat coldly, matter you ask my advice, and I must give it. They sat silent and awkward, and then the To maintain two ladies and pay a debt of elderly lady took out a pencil and began to eighty pounds out of one hundred a year is make calculations in her memorandum book. simply impossible."

odd shillings a year."

can not be done, unless you were to live in a thinking that if you were to exchange out of manner so restricted in the commonest come the Kensington shop into another I have at forts that at your sister's age she would be sure Richmond, I could offer you the first floor ato suffer. You must look on the question bove it for much less rent than you pay Mrs. from all sides, my dear. You must be just to Jones; and you could have your sister living others as well as to that young man, who with von." seems never to— But I will leave him un judged."

They were both silent for a minute, and then

"Yes," said Hilary, firmly.

The old Scotswoman took her hand with a There was a pathos in the tone which smote warm pressure. "Very well. I don't blame Hilary into quick contrition. you. I might have done the same myself. tion- one of the few that we rick folk possess surely understand-" with, even in business relations. To be in his lpower, as you would be for some years if your "Certainly, my dear. When one's triends scheme of gradual payment were carried out, I will write you a check for the amount."

The thing was put so delicately, in such an "A very good plan, and very generous in ordinary manner, as if it were a mere business she found that it was in plain terms a gift or loan of eighty pounds offered by a person al-"Not on my account, my dear, but, your most a stranger, she was at first quite bewil-I often see people making martyrs of dered. Then (ah! let us not blame her if she words came out rather coldly.

"You are very good, and I am exceedingly obliged to you; but I never borrowed money

"Very well; I can understand your feelings.

"I am reckoning what is the largest sum "With Johanna's income and mine it will per month that you could reasonably be exbe a hundred and twenty pounds and some pected to spare, and how you may make the most of what remains. Are you aware that "You accurate girl! But even with this it London lodgings are very expensive? I am

"Ah! that would make us both so much happier! How good you are!"

"You will see I only wish to help you to Miss Balquidder said: "I feel certain there is help yourself; not to put you under any obli but one rational way of accomplishing the gation. Though I can not see any thing so thing, if you are bent upon doing it, if your very terrible in your being slightly indebted own judgment and conscience tell you is ought to an old woman, who has neither chick nor to be done. Is it so?" child, and is at perfect liberty to do what she likes with her own."

"Forgive me! But I have such a horror or Now to my plan. Miss Leaf, have you known horrowing money—you must know why after me long enough to confer on me the benedic- what I have told you of our family. You must

'It is more blessed to give than to receive?" "I do fully; but there are limits even to independence. A person who, for his own pleas- and precious to a woman's heart, and getting ure, is ready to take money from any body instead only what Hilary now gave her-the and every body, without the slightest prospect half-sweet, half-bitter payment of gratitude. or intention of returning it, is quite different. from a friend who in a case of emergency ac- "I will do whatever you think right," murcepts help from another friend, being ready and mured Hilary. willing to take every means of repayment, as I knew you were, and meant you to be. meant, as you suggested, to stop out of your salary so much permonth, till I had my eighty pounds sate back again."

young and strong; still I might fall ill—I be married. A dense, yellow, London fog, might die, and you never be repaid."

that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord.' I morning, and Elizabeth had dressed her three have lent Him a good deal at different times, inistresses one after the other, taking exceed little sad in the way the old lady spoke. Hil | wedding was a wedding, and this was the first ary forgot her awn side of the subject: her she had ever had to do with in her life. pride, her humiliation.

that one ought to work on, struggle on, to the had passed off just like all other evenings. tion, most of all a money obligation?"

is not the greatest thing in this world, that a went straight to Russell Square, every means do to a fellow-creature—one that touches and per as usual, and went to bed at their customsoftens his heart, nay, perhaps wins it to you ary hour without any special demonstrations for life, is to accept a favor from him."

Hilary made no reply.

not had a very happy life myself: at least body has any griet to restrain. most people would say so if they knew it; but, On a wedding morning, of course, there is the Lord has made it up to me by giving me no time to be spared for sentiment. The the means of bringing happiness, in money as principal business appeared to be-dressing. well as other ways, to other people. Most of Mr. Ascott had insisted on doing his part in us have our favorite luxuries; this is mine, making his new connections appear "respect-I like to do people good: I like, also -though, able" at his marriage, and for Selina's sake maybe that is a mean weakness—to feel that they had consented. Indeed, it was inevita-I do it. It all whom I have been made in ble; they had no money whatever to clothe strumental in helping had said to me, as you themselves withal. They must either have have done, I will not be helped. I will not accepted Mr. Ascott's gifts—in which, to do he made happy,' it would have been rather him justice, he was both thoughtful and libe-

over the hard-featurned face, spiritualizing its to do "for the sake of the family."

whole expression. lite, happy still, and hopeful, for all its cares, ward a sister no more. Miss Leaf attired herself plessing was her viches, except the generous Miss Hilary put on her silver-grey poplin, with heart which sanctified them, and made them a cardinal cape, as was then in fashion, trimsuch. Humbled, nay, ashamed, she took and med with white swan's down. It was rather kissed the kindly hand which has succored so an elderly costume, for a bridemaid; but she many, yet which, in the inscrutable mystery was determined to dress warmly, and not of Providence, had been left to go down to the risk, in muslins and laces, the health which grave alone: missing all that is personal, dear, to her now was money, life—nay, honor.

"Well, my bairn, what is to be done?"

CHAPTER XXI.

"But suppose you never had it back? I am IT was not a cheerful morning on which to the like of which the Misses Leaf had never "Yes, I should," said Miss Balquidder, yet seen, penetrated into every corner of the with a serious smile. "You forget, my dear parlor at No. 15, where they were breakfast-bairn, 'Inasmuch as ye have done it to one of ing drearily by candle-light, all in their wedthese little ones, ye have done it unto ME.' 'He ding attire. They had been up since six in and He has always paid me back with usury." ing pleasure in the performance. For sheen There was something at once solemn and a was still little more than a girl, to whom a True, it disappointed her in some things. "But do you not think, Miss Balquidder, She was a little surprised that last evening last extremity, before one accepts an obliga- The interest and bustle of packing soon subtion, most of all a money obligation?" sided—the packing consisting only of the "I do. as a general principle. Yet money traveling trunk, for the rest of the trousscon pecuniary debt should be the worst to bear, having been taken to ignore the very existence And sometimes one of the kindest acts you can of No. 15; and then the three ladies had supof emotion or affection. To Elizabeth this was strange. She had not yet learned the "I speak a little from experience. I have unspeakable bitterness of a parting where no

ral—or they must have staid away from the And a smile, half humorous, half sad, came wedding altogether, which they did not like

So, with a sense of doing their last duty by Hilary wavered. She compared her own the sister, who would be they felt, henceforgith that of this lonely woman, whose only in her violet silk and white China shawl, and Miss Balquidder never let grass grow under brim, with a wreath of roses inside; while that day there was no longer any fear of pub-little bunches of white ribbon: "for," she lic exposure: she had the receipted bill in her said, "my time of roses has gone by." But hand, and she was Miss Balquidder's debtor her sweet faded face had a peace that was not to the extent of eighty pounds.

tion, nor did she feel it as such. She had at the door. Then nature and sisterly feeling learned the lesson which the large hearted rich asserted themselves for a minute. Miss Selican always teach the poor, that, while there is na "gave way," not to any loud or indecorsometimes, to some people, no more galling ous extent, to nothing that could in the least chain, there is to others-and these are the harm her white satin, or crumple her laces highest natures, too-no more firm and sacred and ribbons; but she did shed a tear or two bond than gratitude. But still the debt was -real honest tears-kissed her sisters affecthere; and Hilary would never feel quite easy tionately, hoped they would be very happy at till it was paid—in money, at least. The gen-Riehmond, and that they would often come to erosity she never wished to repay. She would see her at Russell Square. rather feel it wrapping her round, like an arm "You know," said she, half apologetically, that was heavy only through its exceeding "it is a great deal better for one of us at least tenderness, to the end of her days.

was to be a regular monthly deduction from family." her salary; and how, by retrenchment, to make this monthly payment as large as she ed she had. could, was a question which had occupied her- So it was all over. Elizabeth herself, from self and Johanna for a good while after they the aisle of St. Pancras Church, watched the had retired to rest. For there was no time to beginning and ending of the show; a very fine and there was another notice to be given, if people, wedding guests, who seemed to stare the Richmond plan were carried out: another about them a good deal and take little interest sad retrenchment, fore beding which, when in either bride or bridegroom. The only per-Elizabeth brought up supper. Miss Hilary sons Elizabeth recognized were her mistresses could hardly look the girl in the face, and, —Miss Leaf, who kept her veil down and never when she bade her good night, had felt almost stirred; and Miss Hilary, who stood close like a secret conspirator.

No doubt the personal sacrifice would be rolled down the soft check and fell." considerable, for Hilary would have to do the "Miss Hilary's an angel, and he'll be a and give up a hundred little comforts in which ful 'bower-maiden' of old; as, a little excient servant, had made herself necessary to by the mantle-piece and contemplated a letter them both. But the two ladies did not think which had come after the ladies departed; one of that at the moment: they only thought of of these regular monthly Indian letters, after and there was a family parting close at hand, her eye brighter for many days. was a melancholy fact that, of the two im-fond of one, and somebody to be fond of,"

most, namely, clothes.

Finally, they stood all completely arrayed, necessity — a "sweet-heart" — somebody to even to bonnets; Hilary looking wonderfully "keep company with;" it was rather for some-bewitching in hers, which was the very pat-body to love, and perhaps take care of a little. tern of one that may still be seen in a youthful People love according to their natures; and

For Ascott's creditor had been already paid: portrait of our gracious Queen—a large round When Hilary returned to her sisters Miss Leaf's was somewhat like it, only with in the other two-not even in Hilary's.

But it was no debt of disgrace or humilia-. But the time arrived; the carriage drew up to be married and settled. Indeed I assure Nevertheless she had arranged that there you. I have done it all for the good of my

And for the time being she devoutly believ-

be lost. Mrs. Jones must be given notice to; show, with a number of handsomely dressed behind the bride, listening with downcast eyes For she knew that, if the money to clear to the beautiful marriage service. It must have this debt was to be saved, they must part with touched her more than on her sister's account, for a tear, gathered under each eyelash, silently work of their two rooms with her own hands, lucky man that gets her," meditated her faith-Elizabeth, now become a most elever and efficited by the event of the morning, she stood the pain of parting with her. They thought which, Elizabeth was sharp enough to notice, of it sorely, even though she was but a servant, Miss Hilary's step always grew lighter and

Alas! people must take what they earn. It "It must be a nice thing to have somebody pending losses, the person they should miss meditated she. And "old fashioned piece of most would be, not their sister, but Elizabeth. goods" as she was-according to Mrs. Jones Both regrets combined made them sit at the (who now, from the use she was in the Jones's breakfast table—the last meal they should menage, patronized and confided in her exever take together as a family-sad and sorry, tremely) some little bit of womanly craving speaking about little else than the subject after the woman's one hope and crown of which presented itself as easiest and upper-bliss crept into the poor maid-servant's heart. But it was not for the maid-servant's usual

Elizabeth's was a strong nature: its principal the result of much "knocking about" ever element being a capacity for passionate devo-since childhood. Besides, his master, the littedness, almost unlimited in extent. Such erary gentleman, who had picked him out of women, who love most, are not always, in the printing office, had taken a deal of pains deed very rarely, loved best. And so it was with him. Tom was, for his station, a very perhaps as well that poor Elizabeth should intelligent and superior young man. Not a make up her mind, as she did very composed-boy, though he was still under twenty, but a ly, that she herself should never be married : young man: that precocity of development but after that glorious wedding of Miss Hila- which often accompanies a delicate constitury's to Mr. Lyon, should settle down to take tion, making him appear, as he was indeed, care of Miss Leaf all her days.

"And if I turn out only half as good and older than his real age. contented as my mistress, it can't be such a He was a handsome fellow, too, though stoically said Elizabeth Hand.

when her attention was caught by some one in and Elizabeth took great pleasure in looking the passage inquiring for her: yes, actually at him, and in thinking, with a certain half for her. She could hardly believe her eyes motherly, halt romantic satisfaction, that but when she perceived it was her new-found old for her, and her carrying him home from unacquaintance, Tom Cliffe.

He was dressed very well, out of livery; ing, have been long ago buried in Stowbury indeed, he looked so extremely like a gentle church yard.

the parlor.

"All right. I thought this was the house, ever live to be a middle-aged man."

perplexed. Her mistresses were out; she did ject, which was clever enough in its way. not know whether she ought to ask Tom in, es- Elizabeth's interest grew. An ordinary ba-was no other place to take him to.

conclusive, "Oh, gammon!"-sat himself touched her sympathies and roused her admiold Stowbury. It could not be wrong; she men who were then beginning to rise up and if she could help it. in the least curious.

"Now, I call this quite a coincidence. was stopping at St. Pancras Church to look at do handle these serious things. He threw a wedding—some old city fogy who lives in himself, heart and soul, into the new move-Russell Square, and is making a great splash; ment, which, like all revolutions, had at first and there I see you, Elizabeth, standing in the its great and tatal dangers, but yet resulted in crowd, and looking so nice and spicy—as fresh much good; clearing the political sky, and as an apple and as brisk as a bee. I hummed bringing all sorts of hidden abuses under the and hawed and whistled, but I couldn't catch sharp eyes of that great scourge of evil-doers your eye; then I missed you, and was vexed —public opinion.
above a bit, till I saw one like you going in at Yet Elizabeth. reared under the wing of the this door, so I just knocked and asked: and conservative Misses Leaf, was a little startled to see von."

actually none.

exceedingly well. He had added to his natu- of the deepest pity-when he confessed that in mind and character, fully six or seven years dreadful thing to be an old maid after all, small: dark haired, dark eyed, with regular and yet sensitive and mobile features. Alto-The words were scarcely out of her mouth gether Tom Cliffe was decidedly interesting, der the horse's heels, he might, humanly speak-man that Mrs. Jones's little girl took him for "I have a 'church yard cough' at times one, called him "Sir," and showed him into still," said he, when speaking of this little episode of early life. "I don't think I shall Uncommon sharp of me to hunt you out: shook his head, and looked melancholy and wasn't it Elizabeth?" poetical: nay, even showed Elizabeth some But Elizabeth was a little stiff, flurried, and poetry that he himself had written on the subpecially as it must be into the parlor; there ker or butcher boy would not have attracted her in the least: but here was something in However, Tom settled the matter with a the shape of a hero, somebody who at once down, and made himself quite comfortable, ration. For Tom was quite as well informed And Elizabeth was so glad to see him—glad as she was herself: more so, indeed. He was to have another chance of talking about dear one of the many shrewd and clever working would not say a word about the family, not think for themselves, and educate themselves. even tell him she lived with the Misses Leaf He attended classes at mechanics' institutions, And Tom did not seem and young men's debating societies; where every topic of the day, religion, politics, polit-I ical economy, was handled freely, as the young here you are! 'Pon my life, I am very glad when Tom Cliffe, who apparently liked talking and being listened to, gave her a long dis-"Thank you, Tom," said Elizabeth, pleas-sertation on the true principles of the Charter, ed, even grateful for the trouble he had taken and how Frost, Williams, and Jones—names about her: she had so few friends: in truth, all but forgotten now—were very ill-used men, actual martyrs. She was more than startled They began to talk, and Tom Cliffe talked -shocked indeed-until there came a reaction ral cleverness a degree of London sharpness, he never went to church. He saw no use in paid largely to chatter about what they did them, steadily putting Tom Cliffe out of her not understand; the only real religion was mind. One thing she was glad of, that talk-that which a man thought out for himself, and ing so much about his own affairs, he had foracted out for himself. Which was true enough, gotten to inquire concerning hers, and was though only a half truth; and innocent Eliz-still quite ignorant even of her mistresses' abeth did not see the other half.

the earnestness and enthusiasm of the lad, ed at once to inform Miss Hilary that he had wild, fierce iconoclast as he was, ready to cast been here, but that, if she wished it, he should down the whole fabric of Church and State; never come again. And it spoke well for her though without any personal hankering after resolve, that while resolving she was startled lawless rights and low pleasures. His sole to find how very sorry she should feel if Tom idol was, as he said, intellect, and that was Cliffe never came again.

his preservation.

in every flash of his eye, every flush of his ment of feeling, and a general moral sensitivesallow cheek, made Tom Cliffe, even in the ness which people say is seldom or never to two hours he staid with her, come very close be found in her rank of life. to Elizabeth's heart. It was such a warm Because mistresses treat servants as servants. heart, such a liberal heart, thinking so little and not as women; because in the sharp, hard of itself or of its own value.

miliar in kitchens as parlors: but, from the for any womanliness to be developed. And higher bringing up of the two parties concern-therefore since human nature is weak, and ion of the latter than the former.

and Tom had the sense to see that at once. at area doors; mistresses will still have to and he let her see that he did. True, she was nocent; or, if nothing actually vicious results, cal nature, clung to the quiet, solid, practical and her starving babies a morsel of bread. strength of hers. He liked to talk and be lis- When, with a vivid blush that she could tened to by those silent, admiring, gentle gray not repress, Elizabeth told her mistress that eyes; and he thought it very pleasant when, Tom Cliffe had been to see her, the latter rewith a motherly prudence, she warned him to plied at first carelessly, for her mind was prebe careful over his cough, and gave him a occupied. Then, her attention caught by the flannel breast-plate to protect his chest against aforesaid blush, Miss Hilary asked,

When he went away Tom was so far in love that, following the free and easy ways of his class, he attempted to give Elizabeth a kiss; be a pet, and rather too young for a husbut she drew back so hotly that he begged band." her pardon, and slipped away rather confounded.

"That's an odd sort of young woman; there's something in her," said he to himself.

"I'll get a kiss, though, by-and-by."

Meanwhile Elizabeth, having forgotten all there can be no objection. about her dinner, sat thinking, actually doing see him myself next time." nothing but thinking, until within half an And then a sudden sharp recollection that hour of the time when her mistresses might there would likely be no next time, in their be expected back. They were to go direct to service at least, made Miss Hilary feel quite a the hotel, breakfast, wait till the newly-mar-hypocrite. ried couple had departed, and then come home. They would be sure to be weary, and about Tom Cliffe—is not that his name?—bywant their ten.

going, he said; the parsons were all shams, So Elizabeth made every thing ready for name. He therefore could tell no tales of the But she was touched and carried away by Leaf family at Stowbury. Still she determin-

I know I am painting this young woman Also, the fragile health which was betrayed with a strangely tender conscience, a refineline they draw, at the outset, between them-So here began to be told the old story, fa-selves and their domestics, they give no chance ed, conducted in this case more after the fash- without help from without, a long degraded class can never rise, sweet hearts will still Elizabeth Hand was an exceptional person, come crawling through back entries and down He paid her no coarse attentions, did not at-dismiss helpless and fallen, or brazen in initempt to make love to her: but he liked her, quity, many a wretched girl who once was innot pretty, and she was older than he; but may have many a good, respectable servant, that to a boy of nineteen is rather flattering who left to get married, return, complaining than otherwise. Also, for there is a law even that her "young man," whom she knew so under the blind mystery of likings and fallings little about, has turned out a drudken scounin love-a certain weakness in him, that weak-drel of a husband, who drives her back to her ness which generally accompanies the poeti-old comfortable "place" to beg for herself

"How old is the lad?"

"Nineteen."

"That's a bad age, Elizabeth. Too old to

"I never thought of such a thing," said Elizabeth, warmly—and honestly, at the time.

"Did he want to come and see you again?"

"He said so."

"Oh, well, if he is a steady, respectable lad I should like to

"Elizabeth," said she, "we will speak and-by. Now, as soon as ten is over, my sieter wants to talk to you. When you are ready, "That's right, Elizabeth," said Miss Hilawill you come up stairs?" 'rv. softly. "All these changes are very bit-

She spoke in an especially gentle tone, so ter to us also, but we bear them. There is that by no possibility could Elizabeth fancy nothing lasting in this world, except doing right, and being good and faithful and helpful they were displeased with her.

Now, knowing the circumstances of the to one another." tamily, Elizabeth's conscience had often smit- She sighed. ten her that she must eat a great deal, that tidings in the letter which she still held in her her wages, paid regularly month by month hand, clinging to it as we do to something must make a great-hole in her mistress's in-which, however sorely it hurts us, we would come. She was, alack! a sad expense, and not part with for the whole world. But there she tried to lighten her cost in every possible, was no hopelessness or despair in her tone, way. But it never struck her that they could and Elizabeth caught the influence of that do without her, or that any need would arise true courageous heart. for their doing so. So she went into the par- Perhaps you may be able to take me back lor quite unsuspiciously, and found Miss Leaf again soon, Ma'am," said she, looking toward lying on the sofa, and Miss Hilary reading a- Miss Leaf. "And meantime I might get a loud the letter from India. But it was laid place: Mrs. Jones has told me of several:" quietly aside as she said,

"Johanna, Elizabeth is here." must be said, but putting it as gently and kind-fused. "Or." (a bright idea occurred) "I ly as she could, told Elizabeth, what mistresses wonder if Miss Selina, that is, Mrs. Ascott, often think it below their dignity to tell to would take me in at Russell Square?" servants, the plain truth-namely, that cir- Hilary looked hard at her. cumstances obliged herself and Miss Hilary: "Would you really like that?"
to retrench their expenses as much as they "Yes, I should: for I should see and hear possibly could. That they were going to live of you. Miss Hilary, if you please, I wish in two little rooms at Richmond, where they you would ask Mrs. Ascott to take me."

was very hard to say it with those eager eyes toward both Mr. Ascott and the late Miss Sefixed upon her.

Hilary took up the word—

"And so, Elizabeth, much as it grieves us. we shall be obliged to part with you. We cannot any longer afford to keep a servant."

No answer.

mistress.

von. It is like parting with one of our own Johanna.

Elizabeth, recovered from her first bewilder-done all they could, both to find him out and ed grief, was on the point of bursting out into to save him from the public disgrace which entreaties that she might do like many an might blight any hope of reformation. other faithful servant, live without wages, put the result must be left in higher hands. for some reason or other, the thing was inev-reminded her of Ascott. itable; that she must take up her burden. Otherwise they were not unhappy, she and as her mistress had done, even though it her dearest sister. Poor as they were, they

Possibly there had been sad and she stopped, afraid lest it might be found out how often Mrs. Jones had urged her to Then Johanna, rousing herself to say what "better herself," and she had indignantly re-would board with the impates of the house. And Hilary, much surprised-for she was "And so. and so-" Miss Leaf faltered. It well acquainted with Elizabeth's sentiments lina—promised.

CHAPTER XXII.

"It is not even as it was once before, when AND now I leave Miss Hilary for a time; we thought you might do better for yourself, leave her in. if not happiness, great peace. We know, if it were possible, you would rath- Peace which, after these stormy months, was er stay with us, and we would rather beep an actual paradise of calm to both herself and family." And Miss Hilary's voice too failed. Their grief for Ascott had softened down. "However, there is no help for it; we must lis very hopelessness gave it resignation. There was nothing more to be done; they had up with any hardships, rather than be sent. Only at times fits of restless trouble would away. But something in Miss Hilary's man-come: times when a sudden knock at the door ner told her it would be useless-worse than would make Johanna shake nervously for useless, painful: and she would do any thing minutes afterward: when Hilary walked about rather than give her mistress pain. When every where with her mind preoccupied, and utterly unable to control it, she gave vent to her eyes open to notice every chance passerone loud sob, the expression of acute suffering by ; hay, she had sometimes secretly followed on Miss Hilary's countenance was such that down a whole street some figure which, in its she determined to sob no more. She felt that, light jaunty step and long fashionably cut hair, were the last grief of all-leaving that beloved were together, and their poverty had no sting. They knew exactly how much they would re ceive monthly, and how much they ought to born or well-educated than she; who never spend. Though obliged to calculate every take the least notice of her, except sometimes penny, still their income and expenses were to peer curious at the desk where she sits in alike certain; there was no anxiety about the shop-corner, and wonder who "that young money matters, which of itself was an inde-person with the rather pretty curls" can be. scribable relief. Also there was that best No matter, she is happy. blessing-peace at home. Never in all her How much happiness was there in the large days had Johanna known such an easy life; house at Russell Square? sitting quietly in her parlor while Hilary was! The Misses Leaf could not tell; their sister engaged in the shop below; descending to never gave them an opportunity of judging, dinner, where she took the head of the table, and the young people soon learned to treat! her with great respect and even affection; And so, most frequently, is "my sister." But then waiting for the happy tea in their own not in this case. It could not be; they never room, and the walk afterward, in Richmond expected it would. Park or along the Thames banks toward Twickenham. Perhaps it was partly from the called at Russell Square she always found contrast to that weary year in London, but Mrs Ascott handsomely dressed, dignified, and never, in any spring, had the air seemed so gracious. Not in the slightest degree uncivil balmy, or the trees so green. They brought or unsisterly, but gracious-perhaps a thought back to Hilary's face the youthful bloom which too gracious. Most condescendingly anxious she had begin to lose; and, in degree, her that she should stay to luncheon, and cat and youthful brightness, which had also become drink the best the house afforded, but never slightly overclouded. Againshe laughed and by any chance inviting her to stay to dinner. made her little domestic jokes, and regained Consequently, as Mr. Ascott was always abher pretty ways of putting things, so that every sent in the city until dinner, Hilary did not thing always appeared to have a cheerful, and see him for months together, and her brothercomical, side.

capacity for happiness, and especially the the moon, or the Great Mogal. happiness of love, it is sure to be thus—she His wife spoke little about him. After a had a little private sunbeam in her own heart, few faint, formal questions concerning Rich which brightened outside things. After that mond affairs, somehow her conversation alsad letter from India which came on Selina's ways recurred to her own: the dinners sho wedding day, every succeeding one grew more had been at, those she was going to give; her cheerful, more demonstrative, nay, even affectearriages, clothes, jewelry, and so on. She tionate; though still with that queer Scotch was altogether a very great lady, and Hilary, pride of his, that would ask for nothing till it as she avouched Jaughingly-it was, in this could ask and have every thing, and give case, better to laugh than to grieve—felt an every thing in return—the letters were all ad-exceedingly small person beside her. dressed to Johanna.

man!" Miss Leaf would sometimes say, mis-matrimony had produced in her, her temper chievously, when she received them. But appeared rather to have improved than othermore often she said nothing, waiting in peace wise; there was now seldom any trace of that for events to develop themselves. She did not touchy sharpness which used to be called think much about herself, and had no mean "poor Selina's way." And yet Hilary never jealousy over her child; she knew that a right-quitted the house without saying to herself, eous and holy love only makes all natural af-with a sigh, the old phrase. "Poor Selina!" fections more sacred and more dear.

Not merely contented, but happy!

is working too hard, or pity her because the is Elizabeth Hand. obliged to work; has to wear common clothes. Contrary to all expectations, Mrs. Ascott and live in narrow rooms, and pass on her had consented to take Elizabeth into her serpoor weary feet the grand carriages of the vice. With many stipulations and warnings

"My son's my son till he gets him a wife, But my daughter's my daughter all her life."

When on here rare visits to town Hilary in-law was, she declared, no more to her than Also—for while we are made as we are, with any other man upon 'Change, or the man in Nevertheless Mrs. Ascott showed no unkind-"What an advantage it is to be an old wo-ness-nay, among the various changes that

Thus, in the inevitable consequences of And Hilary? She held her head higher things, her visits to Russell Square became and prouder; and the spring trees looked fewer and fewer: she kept them up as a duty. greener, and the river ran brighter in the sun-inot exacting any return, for she felt that was shine. Ah, Heaven pity us all! it is a good impossible, though still keeping up the ghostthing to have love in one's life; it is a good by shadow of sisterly intimacy. Nevertheless thing, if only for a time, to be actually hoppy, she knew well it was but a shadow; that the only face that looked honest, glad welcome, or And so I will leave her, this little woman; that she was honestly glad to see in her brothand nobody need mourn over her because she er-in-law's house was the under house-maid,

Richmond gentry, who are not a bit more well-never to presume on past relations, never even to mention Stowbury, on pair of instant dis-made as small as possible, and escaped whenmissal—still, she did take her, and Elizabeth ever they could. staid. At every one of Miss Hilary's visits, If this be an exaggerated picture of a state lying in wait in the bed chamber, or on the of things perhaps in degree inevitable—and staircase, or creeping up at the last minute to yet it should not be, for it is the source of inopen the ball door, was sure to appear the calculable evil, this dividing of a house against familiar face, beaming all over. Little con-itself—if I have in any way said what is not versation passed between them—Mrs. Ascott true, I would that some intelligent "voice evidently disliked it; still Elizabeth looked from the kitchen" would rise up and tell us well and happy, and when Miss Hilary told what is true, and whether it be possible on her so she always silently smiled.

But this story must tell the whole truth so sorely needs reformation. which lay beneath that fond acquiescing smile.

Elizabeth was certainly in good health, being well fed, well housed, and leading on the whole an easy life; happy, too, when she looked at Miss Hilary. But her migration from Mrs. Jones's lodgings to this grand mansion had not been altogether the translation from Purgatory to Paradise that some would have supposed.

The author of this simple story havingouts of their 'high life below stairs;" to re-till night. peat kitchen conversations, to paint the humors of the servants' hall—the butler and said she, almost crying, the first Sunday night housekeeper getting tipsy together, the cook when she met him accidentally in going to courting the policeman, and the footman mak-church, and, in her dreary state of mind, was ing love successively to every house-maid and exceedingly glad to see him. He consoled her, ladys'-maid. Some writers have depicted all and even went to church with her, half promthis, whether faithfully or not they know best; ising to do the same next Sunday, and calling but the present writer declines to attempt any her "a good little Christian, who almost inthing of the kind. Her business is solely with clined him to be a Christian too." one domestic, the country girl who came unexpectedly into this new world of London doing him good and keeping him out of harm servant-life—a world essentially its own, and —that lad who had so much that was kindly a life of which the upper classes are as igno- and nice about him-Elizabeth consented, not rant as they are of what goes on in Madagascar exactly to an appointment, but she told him and Otaheite.

sophisticated Elizabeth. She, who had been chance of her being there. brought up in a sort of feudal relationship to Alack! she had so few pleasures; she so her dear mistresses, was astonished to find the seldom got even a breath of outside air—it domestics of Russell Square banded together was not thought necessary for servants. into a community which, in spite of their per-only hour she was allowed out was the churchsonal bickerings and jealousies, ended in alli-going on alternate Sunday evenings. How ance offensive and defensive against the supe-pleasant it was to creep out then, and see Tomrior powers, whom they looked upon as their waiting for her under the opposite trees, dressntaural enemies. Invisible enemies, certainly; ed so smart and gentlemanlike, looking so for "master" they hardly ever saw; and, handsome and so glad to see her-her, the excepting the ladys maid, were mostly as poor countrified Elizabeth, who was quizzed ignorant of missis. The housekeeper was messantly by her fellow-servants on her oddthe middle link between the two estates—the ness, plainness, and stupidity. person with whom all business was transacted, and to whom all complaints had to be he talked to her of all his doings and plangenerally in a quizzical, depreciatory, or con-tailor in "Alton Locke," yet with a ramaudemnatory way, the heads of the establish-tic energy about them that strongly interested ment were no more to their domestics than his companion; and he read her his poetry, the people who paid wages, and exacted in and addressed a few lines to herself, beginning, return certain duties, which most of them either side to find means of amending what

Elizabeth sometimes wanted Tom Cliffe to do this-to "write a book," which he, eager young malcontent, was always threatening to do, upon the evils of society, and especially Tom Cliffe the tyranny of the upper classes. was the only person to whom she imparted her troubles and perplexities: how different her life was from that she had been used to; how among her fellow-servants there was not one who did not seem to think and act in a manner totally opposed to every thing she had unfortunately for it-never been in domestic learned from Miss Hilary. How consequentservice, especially in the great houses of Lon- ly she herself was teased, bullied, threatened, don, does not pretend to describe the ins and or at best "sent to Coventry," from morning

"I am quite alone, Tom—I am, indeed,"

And so, with the vague feeling that she was what were her "Sundaysout," and the church This fact was the first which struck the un-ehe usually attended, if he liked to take the

The

Tom did not seem to think her stupid, for Beyond being sometimes talked over, nings, vague and wild as those of the young

"Dearest and best, my tong familiar friend;"

which was rather a poetical exaggeration, But to Elizabeth the whole thing was new, since he had altogether forgotten her in the wonderful; a bliss so far beyond any thing interval of their separation. But she never that had ever befallen her simple life, and so guessed this; and so they both clung to the utterly unexpected therein, that when she early tie, making it out to be ten times strong-went to her bed that night she cried like a er than it really was, as people do who are child over the happiness of Tom's loving her, glad of any excuse for being fond of one and her exceeding unworthiness of the same. Then deficulties arose in her mind. "No

Tom really was getting fond of Elizabeth. followers allowed," was one of the strict laws She touched the higher half of his nature—of the Russell Square dynasty. Like many the spiritual and imaginative half. That he another law of that and of much higher dy-had it, though only a working-man, and she nasties it was only made to be broken; for too, though only a domestic servant, was most stray sweet-hearts were continually climbing true: probably many more of their class have down area railings, or over garden walls, or it than we are at all aware of. Therefore, hiding themselves behind kitchen doors. Nay, these two being special individuals, were at to such an extent was the system carried out, tracted by each other; she by him, because each servant being, from self-interest, a safe he was clever, and he by her, because she was co-conspirator, that very often when Mr, and so good. For he had an ideal, poor Tom Mrs. Ascott went out to dinner, and the old Cliffe! and though it had been smothered and housekeeper retired to bed, there were regular laid to sleep by a not too regular life, it woke symposia held below stairs—nice little supperup again under the kind, sincere eyes of this parties, where all the viands in the pantry plain, simple-minded, honest Elizabeth Hand and the wines in the cellar were freely used;

He knew she was plain, and so old-fashion-where every domestic had his or her "young ed in her dress, that Tom. who was particular man" or "young woman," and the goings-on, about such things, did not always like walk-though not actually discreditable, were of the ing with her: but she was so interesting and most lively kind.

true: she sympathized with him so warmly; To be cognizant of these, and yet to feel he found her so unfailingly and unvaryingly that, as there was no actual wickedness going good to him through all the little humors and lon, she was not justified in "blabbing," was pettishnesses that almost always accompany a severe and perpetual trial to Elizabeth. To a large brain, a nervous temperament, and join them, or bring Tom among them as her delicate health. Her quietness soothed him," young man," was impossible, her strength of character supported him; he "No, Tom," she said, when he begged hard at once leaned on her, and ruled over her. to come in one evening—for it was raining As to Elizabeth's feelings toward from, they fast, and he had a bad cough-"No, Tom, I will hardly bear analyzing: probably hardly can't let you. If other folks break the laws any strong emotion will, especially one that is of the house, I won't-you must go. I can not sudden but progressive. She admired only meet you out of doors." him extremely, and yet she was half sorry for And yet to do this surreptitiously, just as if him. Some things in him she did not at all she were ashamed of him, or as if there were like, and tried heartily to amend. His ner something wrong in their being fond of one yous fancies, irritations, and vagaries she was another, jarred upon Elizabeth's honest naexceedingly tender over; she looked up to ture. She did not want to make a show of him, and yet took care of him; this thought him, especially to her tellow-servants; she of him, and anxiety over him, became by de-had the true woman's instinct of liking to grees the habit of her life. People love in so, keep her treasures all to herself; but she had many different ways; and perhaps that was also her sex's natural yearning for sympathy the natural way in which a woman like Eliz- in the great event of a woman's life. She abeth would love, or creep into love without would have liked to have somebody unto knowing it, which is either the safest or the whom she could say, "Tom has asked me to saddest form which the passion can assume, marry him," and who would have answered

Thus things went on, till one dark, rainy cordially, "It's all right; he is a good fellow: Sunday night, walking round and round the you are sure to be happy. anner circle of the square. Total expect of this Not that she doubled this; but it would feelings. At first, in somewhat high down have been an additional comfort to have a and poetical phrases, then melting into the one, mother's blessing, or a sister's, or even a eternally old and eternally new, "Do you love friend's, upon this strange and sweet emotion me?" followed by a long, long kies, given which had come into her life. So long as it under shelter of the umbrella, and in mortal was thus kept secret there seemed a certain currence on his beat to excite any attention. only laughed at her for feeling so "nesh"

(that means tender, sensitive-but the word she, with great self-denial, insisted on getting is almost unexplainable to other than Stow-rid of Tom for ine. She thought Miss bury ears) on the subject. He liked the ro-Hilary might not wante like Tom's knowing mance and excitement of secret courtship-where she lived, or what her occupation was, men often do; rarely women, unless there is lest he might gossip about it to Stowbury peo-

he called it "silly," and took a little fit of bridge she watched him march sulkily, not crossness on the occasion, he allowed Eliza-without a natural pleasure that he should be beth to write to mother about him, and con- so much vexed at losing her company for an sented that on her next holiday she should go hour or two. But she knew he would soon to Richmond in order to speak to Miss Hila-come to himself-as he did, before he had ry on the same subject, and ask her also to been half a mile on the road to Hampton write to Mrs. Hand, stating how good and Court, meeting a young fellow he knew, and clever Tom was, and how exceedingly happy going with him over that grand old palace, was Tom's Elizabeth.

asked she, shyly. "I am sure Miss Hilary out very strong on the question of hypocritiwould not object, nor Miss Leaf neither."

whether they objected or not; he was a man sey. of twenty, in a good trade—he had lately. gone back to the printing, and being a clever little shop-which nobody need expect to find workman, carned capital wages. He had a at Richmond now-bearing the well-known right to choose whom he liked, and marry name "Janet Balquidder." Entering it, for when he pleased. If Elizabeth didn't care there was no private door, she saw, in the far for him, she might leave him alone.

"Oh, Tom!" was all she answered, with a curls of her dear Miss Hilary. strange gentleness that no one could have be- Elizabeth had long known that her mistress lieved would ever have come into the manner "kept a shop," and with the notious of genof South Sea Islander. And quitting the sub-tility which are just as rife in her class as in ject then, she afterward persuaded him, and any other, had mourned bitterly over this not for the first time, into consenting to what fact. But when she saw how fresh and well she thought right. There is something rather the young lady looked, how busily and cheertouching in a servant's holiday. It comes so fully she seemd to work with her great books seldom. She must count on it for so long be-before her, and with what a composed grace forehand, and remember it for so long after and dignity she came forward when asked for, sympathy with the holiday-makers on the keeping a shop had made or could make the grand gala-days of the English calendar. It smallest difference in Miss Hilary. is a pleasure to watch the innumerable groups' of family folk, little children, and prentice lands.

> ... Dressed in all their best, To walk abroad with Sally."

ponding swains can hardly feel more regret but excessively neat and well-dressed. In her than she when it happens to be wet weather new gown of gray "coburg," her one handon Easter week or at Whitsuutide.

from the printing-office, and Elizabeth got straw bonnet and white ribbons, underneath leave of absence for six hours, was as glorious which the smooth black hair and soft eyes a June day as well could be. As the two showed to great advantage, she appeared, not young people perched themselves on the top " fike a lady"-a servant can seldom do that of the Richmond omnibus, and drove through let her dress be ever so fine-but like a tho-Kensington, Hammersmith, Turnham Green, roughly respectable, intelligent, and pleasantand over Kew Bridge-Tom pointing out all faced young woman. the places, and giving much curious informa- And her blushes came and went so fast, she tion about them-Elizabeth thought there was so nervous and yet so beamingly happy, never was a more beautiful country, or a more that Miss Hilary soon suspected there was lovely summer day: she was, she truly said, more in this visit than at tirst appeared. - as happy as a Queen."

Neverthless, when the omnibus stopped, the mystery would never come out in public.

something in them not quite right, not entire ple: so she determined to pay her visit by womanly.

herself, and appointed to meet him at a cer-But Tom was very considerate, and though tain hour on Richmond Bridge, over which which turnished them with a subject at their "And won't you come and fetch me, Tom?" next debating society, where they both came cal priests and obnoxious kings, with especial Tom protested he did not care two straws reference to Henry VIII. and Cardinal Wol-

> Meanwhile Elizabeth went in search of the corner above the curtained desk, the pretty

This present writer owns to a strong Elizabeth secretly confessed that not even

She herself was much more changed.

.. Why, Elizabeth, I should hardly have known you!" was the involuntary exclamation of her late mistress.

She certainly did look very nice: not smart And the various "Sallys" and their corres- —for her sober taste preferred quiet colors some shawl, which had been honored several Whit-Monday, the day when Tom escaped times by Miss Hilary's wearing, her white

Knowing that with Elizabeth's great shyness

her in the bedroom, and there, with the fold-Cliffe deserves you, I am sure you deserve ing-doors safely shut, discovered the whole him, and I should like to tell him so."

first. Slie had never thought of Elizabeth as Tom's whereabouts, and her little conspiracy likely to get married at all-and to Tom to bring him here, and her hesitation lest it Cliffe.

"Why, isn't he a mere boy; ever so much;

vounger than you are?" "Three years."

old so much faster than men.

sorrowfully.

handsome and clever?"

"Yes: and I'm neither the one nor the energetically that Miss Hilary smiled. other. I have thought all that over too, many a time: indeed I have. Miss Hilary. But the kitchen, and then bring him up stairs to Tom likes me—or fancies he does. Do you speak to my sister and me. think"—and the intense humility which true! At that interview, which of course was own conscious heart a conviction of how very body's satisfaction. He was manly, modest, true this poor girl's love must be. "Do you self-possessed: did not say much—his usual handsomer and cleverer than you are-" worse than unhappy-inight grow actually Elizabeth's being so foud of him. bad.

will love you always?"

"I can't tell.

said poor Elizabeth.

ness which suffused the whole face, Hilary's through the world together-Miss Hilary doubts began to melt away. She thought how turned from the window and sighed. sometimes men, captivated by inward rather; than outward graces, have fallen in love with plain women, or women older than themselves, and actually kept to their attachment, through life, with a fidelity rare as beautiful. Perhaps this young fellow, who seemed by all, accounts superior to his class-having had that every thing should be fair and open, the sense to choose that pearl in an oyster- Elizabeth, on the very next day after that shell, Elizabeth Hand-might also have the happy Whit-Monday, mustered up her coursense so appreciate her, and go on loving her age, asked permission to speak to her mistress, to the end of his days, Anyhow, he loved and told her she was going to be married to her now, and she loved him; and it was use-Tom Cliffe: not immediately, but in a year's less reasoning any more about it.

she rook an opportunity of asking her to help I have only to give my good wishes. If Tom

"Should you, Miss Hilary?" and with a Miss Hilary was a good deal surprised at visible brightening up Elizabeth betrayed might be "intruding."

"Not at all. Tell him to come at once. am not like my sister; we always allow 'followers.' I think a mistress stands in the re-"That is a pity—a great pity: women grow lation of a parent, for the time being: and that can not be a right or good love which is "I know that," said Elizabeth. somewhat concealed from her, as if it were a thing to be rrowfully.
"Besides, did you not tell me he was very "I think so too. And I'm not a bit ashamed of Tom, nor he of me," said Elizabeth, so

"Very well; take him to have his tea in love always has, struck into Miss Hilary's rather trying, Tom acquitted himself to every think he is mistaken? that his liking me—I talkativeness being restrained by the circummean in that sort of way—is quite impossi-stances of the case, and the great impression made upon him by Miss Hilary, who, he af-"No, indeed, and I never said it: never terward admitted to Elizabeth, "was a real thought it," was the earnest reply. "But angel, and he should write a poem upon her." consider: three years younger than yourself; But the little he did say gave the ladies a very good impression of the intelligence and even Miss Hilary stopped: it seemed so cruel to refinement of Elizabeth's sweet-heart. And say such things, and yet she felt bound to say though they were sorry to see him look so them. She knew her former "bower-maiden" delicate, still there was a something better well enough to be convinced that if Elizabeth than handsomeness in his handsome iace, were not happy in marriage she would be which made them not altogether surprised at

As she watched the young couple down "He loves you now: you are sure of that; Richmond Street, in the soft summer twilight but are you sure that he is a thoroughly stable —Elizabeth taking Tom's arm, and Tom drawand reliable character? Do you believe he ing up his stooping figure to its utmost extent, both a little ill-matched in height as they were Perhaps—if I deserved it," in some other things, but walking with that air of perfect confidence and perfect contented-And, looking at the downcast eyes, at the ness in each other which always betrays, to a thorough womanly sweetness and tender-quick eye, those who have agreed to walk

CHAPTER XXIII.

Following Miss Hilary's earnest advice time or so, if all went well.

"Come, Elizabeth," cried her mistress, Mrs. Ascott replied sharply that it was no cheerfully, "I have said all my say, and now affair of hers, and she could not be troubled about it. For her part she thought, if servants which "the rows up stairs" became a favor-knew their own advantages, they would keep ite joke in the servants' hall.

a good place when they had it, and never get But still Mr. Ascott went out daily after married at all. And then, saying she had breaktast, and came home to dinner; and heard a good character of her from the house. Mrs. Ascott spent the morning in her private keeper, she offered Elizabeth the place of sitting room, or "boudoir," as she called it; upper house-maid, a young girl, a protegee of lunched, and drove out in her handsome carthe housekeeper's, being substituted in hers. riage, with her footman behind; dressed ele-

"And when you have sixteen pounds a year, gantly for dinner, and presided at her own and somebody to do all your hard work for table with an air of magnificent satisfaction in you, I dare say you'll think better of it, and all things. She had perfectly accommodated not be so foolish as to go and get married." herself to her new position: and if under her

But Elizabeth had her own private opinion satins and laces beat a solitary, dissatisfied, on that matter. She was but a woman, poor or aching heart, it was nobody's business but thing! and two tiny rooms of her own, with her own. At least, she kept up the splendid Tom to care for and look after, seemed a far sham with a most creditable persistency. happier home than that great house, where But all shams are dangerous things. she had not only her own work to do, but the the surface ever so smooth and green, it will responsibility of teaching and taking charge of crack sometimes, and a faint wreath of smoke that careless, stupid, pretty Esther, who had betray the inward volcano. The like had all the forwardness, untidiness, und unconsci-happened once or twice, as on the day when entiousness of a regular London maid servant, the men-servants were so intensely amused. and was a sore trial to the staid, steady Eliza-Also Elizabeth, when putting in order her beth.

her additional wages, which she oe gan to put she, that Elizabeth had brought her a glass of by in her box—sticks and straws for the new water: and instead of being angry or treating sweet nest that was a-building: a metal teal her with the distant dignity which she had pot, two neat glass salt-cellars, and, awful ex-always kept up her mistress had said, almost travagance !- two real second-hand silver in the old Stowbury tone, "Thank you, Elizspoons-Tom did so like having things nice abeth." about him! These purchases, picked up at stray times, were solid, substantial and useful; no notice, but to slip from the room, and keep domestic rather than personal; and all with her own counsel. a view to Tom rather than herself. She hid them with a magpie-like closeness, for Esther earthquake broke out. There was "a preand she shared the same room; but sometimes clous good row." the footman suspected, at the when Esther was asleep she would peep at breakfast-table; and after breakfast, Master. them with an anxious, lingering tenderness, without waiting for the usual attendance of as if they made more of an assured reality that functionary, with his hat and gloves and what even now seemed so very like a dream.

when Tom and she went to church together, and afterward took a walk, but always parted at the corner of the square. She never brought bedroom in a dead faint, her maid, a foolish him in to the house, nor spoke of him to her little Frenchwoman, screaming over her. How much they guessed of The frightened servants eathered rour gotten it. She seemed to take as little interest none of the comments that were freely made in her servants' affairs as they in hers.

were in general of what was passing in the things. Mistress she was, and these four or upper, occasionally rumors began to reach the five woman, her servants, had lived in her kitchen that "Master had been a-blowing up house for months, but nobody loved her; no-Missis, rather!" And once, after the sole and body knew any thing about her; nobody dinner, with three footmen to wait on two thought of doing aught for her, till a kitchenpeople, was over, Elizabeth, passing through maid. probably out of former experience in the hall, caught the said domestics laughing some domestic emergency, suggested, "Fetch together, and saying it was "as good as a Elizabeth." play; cat and dog was nothing to it." After The advice was eagerly caught at, every mistress's bedroom, which was about the hour Tom consoled her, in his careless but affec. Mr. Ascott left for the city, had several times tionate way; and another silent consolation seen Mrs. Ascott come in there suddenly, was the "little bits of things," bought out of white and trembling. Once, so agitated was

However. Elizabeth had the wisdom to take

At last one day, the smouldering domestic a Hansom cab had flung himself out at the -Except, indeed, on those Sunday nights hall door, slamming it after him with a noise her engagement she neither knew nor cared. a cluster, but nobody attempted to touch the Mrs. Ascott, too, had apparently quite for poor lady, who lay rigid and helpless, hearing upon her, or the conjectures as to what Master Nevertheless, ignorant as the lower regions had done or said that produced this state of bility shifted to some other body's shoulders; age, even this woman was not proof against so in five minutes Elizabeth had the room the glorious mystery of maternity, which cleared, and her mistress laid upon the bed, should make every daughter of Eve feel the with nobody near except herself and the French first sure hope of her first born child to be a

"Nothing, ma'am. It's only me—Elizabeth."

At the familiar soothing voice the poor woman—a poor, wretched, forlorn woman she looked, lying there, in spite of all her grandeur, -turned feebly round.

"Oh, Elizabeth, I'm so ill! take care of

And she fainted away once more.

herself, and then the first thing she said was circumstances bring about unforeseen confito bid Elizabeth bolt the door and keep every hody out.

"The doctor, ma'am, if he comes?"

"I'll not see him. I don't want him. 1-" know what it is.

She pulled Elizabeth closer to her, whisper

a violent fit of hysterical weeping.

Amazed, shocked, Elizabeth at first did not she had. know what to do; then she took her mistress's head on her shoulder, and quieted her by degrees almost as she would a child. The sobbing ceased, and Mrs. Ascott lay still a minute, room, and, fretful, peevish, made the very till suddenly she clutched Elizabeth's arm.

"Mind you don't tell. He doesn't know, and he shall not; it would please him so. think I shall hate it because it is his child."

She spoke with a fierceness that was hardly credible either in the dignified Mrs. Peter friend. Ascott or the languid Miss Selina. To think of Miss Selina expecting a baby! The idea perfectly confounded poor Elizabeth.

turn out a great comfort to you."

almost of itself.

"Think, to have a tiny little creature lying earnest of his gratitude. here beside you; something your very own, I'm sure you would be so fond of it."

Human nature is strong. woman, living her forty years without any last was permitted to come and pay a formal strong emotion, marrying without love, and visit; nor to Tom Cliffe, whom she now saw very reaping, not in contrition, but angry bitter-rarely, for her mistress, with characteristic body being so thankful to have the responsi-|ness, the certain punishment of such a marrisort of Divine annunciation.

By-and-by Mrs. Ascott opened her eyes. Mrs. Ascott lay listening to Elizabeth. "Who's that? What are you doing to Gradually through her shut eyelids a few quiet tears began to flow. .

"Do you mind me talking to you this way, ma'am ?''

"No, no! Say what you like. I'm glad to have any body to speak to. Oh, I am a very miserable woman!" .*

Strange that Selina Ascott should come to betray, and to Elizabeth Hand, of all people, It was some time before she came quite to that she was a "miserable woman." dences: and the confidence once given is not easily recalled. Apparently the lady did not wish to recall it. In the solitude of her splen-I did house, in her total want of all female companionship—for she refused to have her sisters sent for—" he would only insult them, and I'll ed something in her ear, and then burst into not have my family insulted"-poor Selina clung to her old servant as the only comfort

During the dreary months that followed, when, during the long, close summer days, the sick lady scarcely stirred from her bedmost of what to women in general are such patiently borne and sacred sufferings, Elizabeth was her constant attendant. She hudoes not please me. Sometimes I almost mored all her whims, endured all her ill-tempers, cheered her in her low spirits, and was, in fact, her mistress's sole companion and

This position no one disputed with her. It is not every woman who has, as Miss Leat used to say of Elizabeth, "a genius for nurs-"I don't know very much about such mating;" and very few patients make nursing a ters," said she, deprecatingly; "but I'm sure, labor of love. The whole household were ma'am, you ought to keep yourself quiet, and considerably relieved by her taking a respon-I wouldn't hate the poor little baby if I were sibility for which she was so well fitted and so It may be a very nice little thing, and little envied. Even Mr. Ascott, who, when his approaching honors could no longer be Mrs. Ascott lifted her heavy eyes to the concealed from him, became for the nonce a kindly, sympathetic, womanly face—thorough most attentive husband, and succumbed dutiwoman, for, as Elizabeth went on, her heart fully to every fancy his wife entertained, openly warmed with the strong instinct which comes expressed his satisfaction in Elizabeth, and gave her one or two bright golden guineas in

How far she herself appreciated her new and with its pretty face looking so innocent and important position; whether her duties were sweet at you, and its pretty fingers touching done from duty, or pity, or that determined you." Here Elizabeth's voice quite faltered self-devotedness which some women are alover the picture she had drawn. "Oh, ma'am, ways ready to carry out toward any helpless thing that needs them, I can not say, for she This cold, selfish never told. Not even to Miss Hilary, who at selfishness, would hardly let her out of her tleness came over her. Her trettul dislike of seeing any face about her but Elizabeth's sight for half an hour.

Tom at first was exceedingly savage at this: became less. She even endured her husband's by degrees he got more reconciled, and met company for an hour of an evening; and athis sweet-heart now and then for a tew min- hast humbled her pride enough to beg him to utes at the area gate, or wrote her long poeti- invite her sisters to Russell Square from Satcal letters, which he confided to some of her urday to Monday, the only time when Hilary fellow-servants, who thereby got acquainted could be spared. with their secret. But it mattered little, as "For we don't know what may happen," Elizabeth had faithfully promised that, when said she to him, rather seriously.

smooth and happy, she would marry Tom at and desired her to get such ridiculous fancies once. So she took the jokes below stairs with out of her head, still he consented, and himgreat composure: feeling, indeed, too proud self wrote to Miss Leaf, giving the formal inand content to perplex herself much about vitation.

any thing. required all Elizabeth's reasonings to counter- the superabundance of his good feeling, had Yet sometimes poor Mrs. Ascott would take over and over again, the little clothes, and exam-vey them all the way to Richmond. ine them with children delight. Sometimes "And," she said, "perhaps some of these she would gossip for hours over the blessing days my son, if he is a son, may have the that was sent to her so late in life—half-pleasure of escorting his aunts home. I shall regretting that it had come so late: that she certainly call him 'Henry Leaf,' and bring should be almost an old woman before her him up to be in every war a credit to our little son or daughter was grown up.

"Still, I may live to see it, you know: to have a pretty girl to take on my arm into a cott had refired to bed, it was still only nine ball-room, or a big fellow to send to College: o'clock, and a bright moonlight night. Elizthe Leafs always went to College in old times, aboth thought she could steal down stairs and He shall be Henry Leaf Ascott, that I am try to get a breath of tresh air round the determined on; and it it's a girl, perhaps I square. Her long confinement made her almay call her Johanna. My sister would like most sick sometimes for a sight of the outer, it: wouldn't she?"

For more and more, in the strange soften- -her own faithful Tom.

old ties.

cause of trouble. Women do not necessarily kiss, long and close and tender, such as he die in childbirth even at forty; and in twenty would sometimes insist upon giving her, in years more I shall only be sixty-not such a spite of all policemen. His love for her, dethink so, Elizabeth??

She too, out of sympathy or instinct, was be-went climbing over the fleecy white clouds in coming wondrous wise.

very uninteresting, except by women and how Tom would have enjoyed it, and wished mothers. Let me hasten on.

proached, a curious tranquility and even gen-his humors and weaknesses, all his little cross-her mistress's trial was over, and every thing And though he answered, "Oh, nonsense!"

The three sisters spent a happy time to-Nevertheless, her life was not easy, for Mrs. gether, and Hilary made some highly appre-Ascott was very difficult to manage. She re-ciated family jokes about the handsome sisted angrily all the personal sacrifices entail. Christmas box that Selina was going to be so ed by impending motherhood, and its terrors kind as to give them, and the small probaand forebodings used to come over her-poor bility that she would have much enjoyment of weak woman that she was!-in a way that the Christmas dinner to which Mr. Ascott. in act, and all her self-control to hide the pre-invited his sisters-in-law. The baby, blessed sentiment of evil, not unnatural under the cir-innocent! seemed to have softened down all things—as babies often do.

Altogether, it was with great cheerfulness, his of pathetic happiness: when she busied affectionateness, and hope that they took herself eagerly over the preparations for the leave of Selina: she, with unwonted considenew-comer: would make Elizabeth take out, ration, insisting that the carriage should con-family.

When the ladies were away, and Mrs. Asworld, a sight of-let me tell the entire truth ing of her nature, did Seliha go back to the. She had not seen him now for fourteen days, and though his letters were very nice and ex-"I am not older than my mother was when coedingly elever, still she craved for a look at Hilary was born. She died, but that was be-his face, a grasp of his hand, perhaps even a very old woman. Besides, mothers never are monstrative as was his nature, had become to old: at least not to their children. Don't you this still, quiet girl inexpressibly sweet, far sweeter than she knew.

And Elizabeth answered as she best could. It was a clear winter night, and the moon a way that made heauty even in Russell Square. But I am aware all this will be thought Elizabeth looked up at the sky, and thought the were beside her, and was so glad to think

By degrees, as Mrs. Ascott's hour ap-ine would soon be beside her always, with all nesses and complainings; she could put up whose only pride came through love, have nowith all, and be happy through all, if only she thing left them except rags. In a moment all had him with her and loving her.

their thin robes of happiness are torn off; they His love for her, though fitful and fanciful, stand shivering, naked and helpless before the was yet so warm and real that it had become blasts of the bitter world. a necessity of her life. As he always told her! This was Elizabeth's case. After the first?

quarrels with her-hers was to him. .

out me! Well, it won't be for long."

And she wished she could have let him know than she expected and deserved. she was out here, that they might have had a She passed the couple, still unobserved by chat for just ten minutes.

usual trysting place, a large overhanging plane- I am not going to make a tragic heroine of Surely, surely, that could not be Tom! say, there is nothing tragic about the incident. Quite impossible, for he was not alone. Two Merely a plain, quiet, old-fashioned woman, people, a voung man and a young woman, who is so foolish as to like a handsome young stood at the tryst, absorbed in conversation: swain, and to believe in him, and to be surevidently sweethearts, for he had one arm prised when he deserts her for a pretty girl of round her, and he kissed her unresisted seve-eighteen. All quite after the way things go ral times.

At length, with the sort of feeling that makes more of a farce than a tragedy. some ugly spectre that we feel sure, if we stare underneath the surface, have a good many of it out, will prove to be a mere imagination, she the elements of tragedy. "sweethearts."

much occupied with one another; but she saw jealousy. She was not given to "fits" under them, and saw at once that it was Tom, Tom's any circumstances, or about any thing. own selt, and with him her fellow-servant, she felt went deep down into her heart, rooted Estber.

volumes will still remain to be written. It is the square to her home: then quietly went up next to remorse for guilt, the sharpest, sorest, stairs to her garret, locked the door, and sat most maddening torment that human nature down upon her bed.

A man can not make love to two women, a crept to bed in the darks woman can not coquet with two men, without When soon afterward Esther likewise came causing in degree that horrible agony, cruel up to bed. Elizabeth pretened to be asleep. as death, which is at the root of half the tra- Only once, taking a stealthy glance at the gedies, and the cause of half the crimes of this pretty girl who stood combing her hair at the world.

sometimes it is a case of slow poisoning, or of her, at sight of the red young lips which Tom ordeal by red-hot irons, which though not ta- had just been lassing, of the light figure which tal, undermines the whole character, and burns he had clasped as the used to clasp her. ineffaceable scars into the soul. And people she never speke not one word. take it in various ways-some fiercely, stung. Half an hour after she was roused by the by a sense of wounded self-love; others haugh-nurse coming to her bedside. Mrs. Ascott

"Pride's a safe robe, I'll wear it; but no rags." Others, again, humble, self-distrustful natures, and in the sharp struggle between birth and -especially after he had had one of his little instant of stunned bewilderment and despair she took it all quite naturally, as if it were a "Poor Tom, I wonder how he gets on with-thing which she ought all along to have known was sure to happen, and which was no more

them, and then walked round the other side

Unconsciously she walked toward their of the square, deliberately home.

tree on the Keppel Street corner of the square, this poor servant girl. Perhaps, people may on in the world, especially in the servant-Elizabeth gazed, facinated, almost doubting world: and the best she can do is to get over the evidence of her own senses. For the young it, or take another sweetheart as quickly as man's figure was so excessively like Tom's possible. A very common story after all, and one go steadily up to a shadow by the roadside, But there are some farces which, if you look walked deliberately up to and past these I shall neither paint Elizabeth tearing her 'sweethearts.' own hair nor Esther's, nor going raging about They did not see her: they were far too the square in moonlight in an insane fit of itself, and either blossomed or cankered there.

People may write volumes on jealousy, and On this night she, as I said, walked round

She might have sat there for an hour or We may sit and gaze from the boxes at our more, her bonnet and shawl still on, without Othellos and Birmers: we may laugh at the stirring, without crying, altogether cold and silly heart-burnings between Cousin Kate and hard like a stone, when she fancied she heard Cousin Lucy in the ball-room, or the squabbles her mistress's bell ring, and mechanically rose of Mary and Sally, in the kitchen over the up and went down stairs to listen. Nothing gardener's lad: but there the thing remains, was wanted, so she returned to her garret and looking-glass, she was conscious of a sick sense The complaint comes in different forms: of repulsion, a path like a knife running thro'

> was very ill, and was cailing for Elizabeth. Soon the whole establishment was in confusion, thing but her mistress.

Contrary to every expectation, all ended to the City next day the master of the house, two, and the cook told her he had been to the who, in the midst of his anxiety and felicity, kitchen door several times asking for her, but had managed to secure a good night's sleep being answered that she was with her mistress and a good breakfast, had the pleasure of up stairs, had gone away. sending off a special messenger to the Times "In the sulks, most like, though he didn't office with the notification, "The Lady of Pe-look it. He's a pleasant spoken young man, ter Ascott, Esq., of a son and heir."

CHAPTER XXIV.

diminished the excitement incident on the month's end the baby was to be given entirely event at Russell Square.

Never was there such a wonderful baby, tabulous amount of wages. and never was there such a fuss made over it. Unprejudiced persons might have called it an position was made, suddenly recurring to the ugly, weakly little thing; indeed, at first there fact which seemed hitherto to have quite were such apprehensions of its dying that it slipped from her mind—"unless you are still had been baptized in a great hurry. "Henry willing to get married, and think you would heaf Ascott," according to the mother's desire, be happer married. In that case I won't hinder you. But it would be such a comfort which in her critical position nobody dared to hinder you. But it would be such a comfort thwart. Even at the end of fourteen days the to me to keep you a little longer."
"son and heir" was still a puling, sickly,
"Thank you, ma'am," answered Elizabeth, ellow-faced baby. But to the mother it was softly, and busied berself with walking baby every thing.

Mrs. Ascott's whole nature seemed to undergo puny face, God help her, poor Elizabeth! a change. Her very eyes—those cold blue ry that in three weeks' time nobody was the eyes of Miss Selina's—took a depth and ten-least anxious about her, and Mr. Ascott arderness whenever she turned to look at the ranged to start on a business journey to Edinlittle bundle that lay beside her. She never burgh: promising, however, to be back in vearied of touching the tiny hands and feet, three days for the Christmas dinner, which and wondering at them, and showing—to every one of the household who was favored with a sight of it—"my baby," as if it had wedding dresses: and Mrs. Ascott herself took wedding dresses: and Mrs. Ascott herself took been a miracle of the universe. She was so the most vital interest in Johanna's having a unutterably happy and proud.

the baby. To her arms it had first been com-having it made of the most beautiful lace—mitted; she had stood by at its first washing the "sweetest" old lady's cap that could and dressing, and had scarcely left it or her possibly he invented.

mistress since. Nurse, a very grand personage, had been a little jealous of her at first, all hearts, and drawn every natural tie closer. only twenty-three years old.

Miss Hilary was so engrossed by her excite-that dreary heartless wedding-day, that they ment and delight over the baby that she only should ever have been sitting in Selina's room observed, "Elizabeth, you look rather worn-so merry and comfortable, admiring the baby, out; this has been a trying time for you." and on the friendliest terms with baby's papa?

death Elizabeth had no time to think of any And Elizabeth had just answered, "Yes"no more.

During the fortnight she had seen nothing speedily and happily; and before he went off of Tom. He had written her a short note or and I'm sure I wish you luck with him," said Cookie, who, like all the other servants, was now exceedingly civil to Elizabeth.

Her star had risen; she was considered in the household a most fortunate woman. It was shortly understood that nurse-majestic A гоктывит's time-rather-increased than nurse, had spoken so highly of her, that at the into her charge, with, of course, an almost "Unless," said Mrs. Ascott, when this pro-up and down the room, hushing it on her shoulder. If in the dim light tears fell on its inew cap for the occasion. Nay, she insisted Elizabeth, too, seemed not a little proud of upon ordering it from her own milliner, and but soon grew condescending, and made great Selina, lying on the sofa. in her graceful white use of her in the sick room, alleging that such wrapper, and her neat close cap, looked so an exceedingly sensible young person, so quiet young, so pretty, and, above all, so exceedingand steady, was almost as good as a middle by gentle and motherly, that her sisters' hearts aged married woman. Indeed, she once asked were all to overflowing. They acknowledged Elizabeth if she was a widow, since she looked that happiness, like misery, was often brought as if she had "seen trouble:" and was very about in a fashion totally unforeseen and in-much surprised to learn she was single and credible. Who would have thought, for instance, on that wretched night when Mr. Nobody else took any notice of her. Even Ascott came to Hilary at Kensington, or on

"Papa" is a magical word, and let married He took it; and she crept away from him people have fallen ever so wide asunder, the and sat down. thought, "my child's mother," "my baby's . "Tom, I've got something to say to you, father," must in some degree bridge the gulfiand I'd better say it at once." between them. When Peter Ascoit was seen "To be sure. "Tisu't any bad news from stooping, awkwardly enough, over his son's home, is it? Or "-looking uneasily at her-cradle, poking his dumpy fingers into each "I haven't vexed you, have I?" tiny cheek in a half-alarmed, half-investiga- "Vered me," she repeated, thinking what ting manner, as if he wondered how it had all a small foolish word it was to express what come about, but, on the whole, was rather had happened, and what she had been sufferpleased than otherwise-the good angel of the ing. "No, Tom, not vexed me exactly. But household might have stood by and smiled, I want to ask you a question. Who was it trusting that the ghastly skeleton therein that you stood talking with, under our tree in might in time crumble away into harmless the square, between nine and ten o'clock, this dust, under the sacred touch of infant fingers, night three weeks ago?"

The husband and wife took a kindly, even Though there was no anger in the voice it affectionate leave of one another. Mrs. Ascott was so serious and deliberate that it made Tom called him "Peter," and begged him to take start.

care of himself, and wrap up well that cold night. And when he was gone, and her sis-tell?" ters also, she lay on her sofa with her eyes "Yes, you can; for it was a fine moonlight open, thinking. What sort of thoughts they night, and you stood there a long time."

away and been forgotten, or how far they all." might have influenced her life to come, none knew, and none ever did know.

When there came a knock at the door, and "Don't be angry, only tell me the plain truth.

overheard it and turned round.

"Who is wanting you? Tom Cliffe? Isn't For a moment Tom look at the young man you are to! Send her up stairs, and tell her I wished it, way?" though I don't allow 'followers.'" more, and obeyed. She must speak to Tom subdued voice, some time, it might as well be done to-night "Tom, are you fond of Esther? You would as not. Without pausing to think, she went not kiss her if you were not fond of her.

actly his own old self, he came forward to treaty, the last clinging to a hope which she meet her so completely in his old familiar way, knew to be false. that for the instant she thought she must be under some dreadful delusion: that the moon-nice sort of girl, and we're very good friends." light night in the square must have been all a "Tom, a man can't be 'friends,' in that dream; Esther, still the silly little Esther, sort of way, with a pretty girl of eighteen, whom Tom had often heard of and laughed when he is going to be married to somebody at: and Tom, her own Tom, who loved no-else. At least, in my mind, he ought not. body but her.

"Elizabeth, what an age it is since I've had say, yon're jealous, and you'd better get over a sight of you!"

But though the manner was warm as ever,

A something smote her, as if Duty tried To mock the voice of Love, how long since flown,"

"Why, what's the matter? Aren't you glad to see me? Give me another kiss, my act? girl, do!"

"Three weeks ago; how can I possibly were, whether repentant or hopeful, solemn "Under the tree, talking to somebody? or tender, whether they might have passed What nonsense! Perhaps it wasn't me at

"It was, for I saw you."

"The devil you did!" muttered Tom.

a message for Elizabeth, Mrs. Ascott suddenly The young woman that was with you was our

For a moment Tom looked altogether conthat the young man you are to be married to? founded. Then he tried to recover himself, Go down to him at once. And stay, Eliza- and said crossly, "Well, and if it was, where's beth, as it's such a bitter night, take him for the harm? Can't a man be civil to a pretty half an hour into the housekeeper's room, girl without being called over the coals in this

Elizabeth made no answer, at least not im-"Thank you, ma'am," said Elizabeth once mediately. At last she said, in a very gentle, down with dull heavy steps to the housekeep- you like her as-as you used to like me?"

And she looked right up into his eyes. Tom stood there alone. He looked so ex- had no reproach in them, only a piteous en-

"Like Esther? Of course I do? She's a Tom laughed in a confused manner. "I

Was she jealous? was it all fancy, folly? Did Tom stand there, true as steel, without a feeling in his heart that she did not share, without a hope in which she was not united, and quiet as she stood, Elizabeth shivered in holding her, and preferring her, with that individuality and unity of love which true love er gives and exacts, as it has a right to ex-

Not that poor Elizabeth reasoned in this way.

but she felt the thing by instinct without rea-| She spoke stro-gly, unhesitatingly, and for as if I was somebody else, and had never be quiet humble natures, which is dangerous to longed to you at all, do you love Esther meddle with.

be fickle, but he was not deceitful; he could er he was glad or sorry, he hardly knew. not look into Elizabeth's eyes and tell her a "1"m not going to take this back, any how," deliberate lie: somehow he dared not.

me—I think I do."

So Elizabeth's "ship went down." lt might have been a very frail vessel, that no too much. People who have once loved one body in their right senses would have trusted another, though the love is dead (for love can any treasure with, still she did: and it was all die), are not able to bury it all at once, or if she had, and it went down to the bottom like they do, its pale ghost will still come knocka stone.

It is astonishing how soon the sea closes let me in!" over this sort of wreck; and how quietly people take—when they must take, and there is dignity, to have bade Tom farewell without a no more disbelieving it—the truth which they glance or a touch. But she did not. When would have given their lives to prove was an he had fastened her brooch she looked up in impossible lie.

For some minutes Tom stood treing the fire, ing look and then clung about his neck: and Elizabeth sat on her chair opposite without speaking. Then she took off her brooch, the only love-token he had given her, and put kissed her many times, and even felt his old it into his hand.

"What's this for?" asked he. suddenly.

It's Esther, not me, you must marry now."

And the thought of Esther, giddy, flirting came in. useless Esther, as Tom's wife, was almost more. Laughing, smirking, pretty Esther, who, than she could bear. The sting of it put even thoughtless as she was, had yet the sense to into her crushed humility a certain honest self-draw back when she saw them.

"I'm not going to blame you. Tom: but I perarively: and she came. think I'm as good as she. I'm not pretty, I "Esther, I've given up Tom; you may take for my age: but I was worth something, and I'll forgive you. If not-" You should not have served me so."

him.

She forsake Tom! Elizabeth almost smiled. you. If I ever was I have got over it."

do, a little, in spite of E-ther Martin. But the most natural, easy, and only thing to be that's not my way of liking, and I couldn't done. stand it."

"What couldn't you stand?"

ro-morrow: your telling me I was every thing tragedies that I have spoken of is being enactto you one week, and saying exactly the same of within, the actors are called upon to meet thing to another girl the next. It would be some other tragedy from without, so that exhard enough to bear if we were only friends, ternal energy counteracts inward emotion, and but as sweet-hearts, as husband and wife, it holy sympathy with another's sufferings stifles would be impossible. No Tom, I tell you the all personal pain. That truth about sorrows truth, I could not stand it."

ning. an instant there wed out of her soft eyes "Tom," she said, "tell me outright, just that wild fierce rk. latent even in these

Tom did not attempt it. He felt all was Truthful people enforce truth. Tom might over. Whether he had lost or gained; wheth-

he said, "fiddling" with the brooch; and "Well, then-since you will have it out of then going up to her, he attempted, with trembling hands, to refasten it in her collar.

The familiar action, his contrite look, were ling at the door of their hearts, "Let me in,

Elizabeth ought, I know, in proper feminine his familiar face a sorrowful, wistful, linger-

"O Tom, Tom. I was so fond of you!"

And Tom mingled his tears with hers, and affection returning, making him half oblivious of Esther; but mercifully—for love rebuilt up-"You know. You'd better give it to Esther for lost faith is like a house founded upon sands—the door opened, and Esther herself

"Come here, Esther!" Elizabeth called, im-know, nor lively, nor young, at least I'm old him if he wants you. Make him a good wife,

She could not say another word. She shut Tom said, the usual excuse, that he "couldn't the door upon them, and crept up stairs, conhelp it." And suddenly turning round, he scious only of one thought-if she only could begged her to forgive him, and not for-ake get away from them, and never see either of their faces any more!

And in this fate was kind to her, though in • I do forgive you: I'm not a bit angry with that awful way in which fate—say rather Providence-often works: cutting, with one sharp "That's right. You're a dear soul. Do blow, some knot that our poor, feeble, mortal you think that I don't like you, Elizabeth?" fingers have been long laboring at in vain, or "Oh yes," she said, sadly, "I dare say you making that which seemed impossible to do

How strangely often in human life "one woe doth tread upon the other's heel!" How Your kissing me to day, and another girl continually, while one of those small private coming "in battalions" may have a divine meaning in it-may be one of those mysterious | She stopped; and as nurse determinately laws which guide the universe-laws that we carried it away, she attempted no resistance, can only trace in fragments, and guess at the only followed it across the room with eager we shall "know even as we are known."

Therefore I ask no pity for Elizabeth, be and before morning she was slightly delirious. cause ere she had time to collect herself, and Still nobody apprehended danger. Nobody realize in her poor confused mind that she really knew any thing about the matter exhad indeed said good by to Tom, given him up cept nurse, and she, with a selfish fear of being and parted from him forever, she was summon-blamed for carelessness, resisted sending for ed to her mistress's room, there to hold a the doctor till his usual hour of calling. In colloquy outside the door with the seriously-that large house, as in many other large houses, perplexed nurse.

which sometimes, after all seems safe, strike might easily be sick or dying in some room terror into a rejoicing household, and end by therein, while all things else went on just as carrying away, remorseless, the young wife usual, and no one was any the wiser. from her searcely tasted bliss, the mother of About noon even Elizabeth's ignorance was duties and yearning loves.

cold or been too much excited; or, in the over- own responsibility she sent, or rather she went confidence of her recovery, some slight neglect to fetch the doctor. He came; and his fiat had occurred—some trifle which nobody thinks threw the whole household into consternation. of till afterward, and which yet proves the fatal cause, "the little pin" that his awful state.

"Bores through the castle wall"

Mrs. Ascott was certainly ill, she was not at a silent, mysterious room, and listened, unhinfirst very ill; and there being no telegraphs in dered, to the ravings that issued thence. "Poor those days no one thought of sending for either Missis," and the "poor little baby," were hour, when Elizabeth went up to her mistress, and confidentially sympathized over with inand saw the flush on her cheek and the rest quiring tradespeople at the area gate. A sense less expression of her eye, King Death had of awe and suspense stole over the whole house, secretly crept in at the door of the mansion in gathering thicker hour by hour of that dark Russell Square.

The patient was carefully removed back into her bed. She said little, except once, look-|"in danger," Elizabeth, aware that there was

ing up uneasily-

"I don't feel quite myself, Elizabeth."

long-familiar way, telling her she would be bet- and the other to Miss Hilary. The first she ter in the morning, she smiled contentedly, gave to the footman to post; the second she and turned to go to sleep.

an hour or more.

Toward the middle of the night, when her moment, posted them both. So vainly did the baoy was brought to her, and the child in-poor girl watch and wait; neither Miss Leaf stinctively refused its natural food, and began nor Miss Hilary came. screaming violently, Mrs. Ascott's troubled look returned.

–I won't, I say!"

And when, to sooth her, the little thing was hopeless from the beginning. ain put into her arms, and again turned "Where is her husband? Has she no relaagain put into her arms, and again turned

"Am I going to be ill?—is baby—" rest, believing, in deep humility, that one day eyes. It was the last glimmer of reason there, we shall "know even as we are known." From that time her mind began to wander,

'every body's business was nobody's business, One of those sudden changes had come and a member of the family, even the mistress, many children from her close circle of happy roused up to the conviction that something ties and yearning loves. was very wrong with Mrs. Ascott, and that Mrs. Ascott was ill. Either she had taken nurse's skill could not counteract it. On her

Now they knew that the poor lady whose happiness had touched the very stoniest hearts in the establishment hovered upon the brink of the grave. Now all the women-servants, of mortal hope, and King Death enters in all down to the little kitchen-maid with her dirty apron at her eyes, crept up stairs, one after Nobedy knew it or dreaded it: for though the other, to the door of what had been such her husband or her sisters. But that very spoken of softly at the kitchen dinner table. December day.

When her mistress was first pronounced no one to act but herself, had taken a brief opportunity to slip from the room and write And when here servant soothed her in the two letters, one to her master in Edinburgh, charged him to send by special messenger to

Nevertheless, Elizabeth did not go to her Richmond. But he, being lazily inclined, or bed, but sat behind the curtain, motionless, for else thinking that, as the order was only given by Elizabeth, it was of comparatively little

By night Mrs. Ascott's delirium began to subside, but her strength was ebbing fast. "What is the matter? What are you do Two physicians—three—stood by the unconing, nurse? I won't be parted from my baby scious woman, and pronounced that all hope was gone, if, indeed the case had not been from her, a frightened expression came into tions—no mother or sisters?" asked the fash-the mother's face. ionable physician, Sir ————, touched by the slight or this poor lady dying alone, with only a nurse and a servant about her. "If she tors had said it would. Mrs. Ascott opened has, they ought to be sent for immediately." her eyes; they wandered from side to side, and Elizabeth ran down stairs, and rousing the then she said, feebly, old butler from his bed, prevailed on him to "Elizabeth, where's my baby?" start immediately in the carriage to bring back. What Elizabeth answered she never could Miss Leaf and Miss Hilary. It would be mid-remember; perhaps nothing, or her agitation night before he reached Richmond; still it betrayed her, for Mrs. Ascott said again, "Elizabeth, am I going to -to leave my

"I'll do it, my girl," said he, kindly; "and baby?"

I'll tell them as gently as I can. Never fear." Some people might have considered it best to When Elizabeth returned to her mistress's reply with a lie—the frightened, cowardly lie room the doctors were all gone, and nurse, that is so often told at death-beds to the soul standing at the foot of Mrs. Ascott's bed, was passing direct to its God. But this girl could watching her with the serious look which even not and dared not. a hireling or a stranger wears in the presence. Leaning over her mistress, she whispered as of that sight which, however familiar, never softly as she could, choking down the tears that comes over a human face when the warrant you again some day quite sate." for its dissolution has gone forth, struck her at "Will He?"

father's she did not remember, and among her never learned before—as Selina was now learnfew friends and connections none other had oc-ing. Perhaps even those three short weeks of curred. At twenty-three years of age she was motherhood had power so to raise her whole still ignorant of that solemn experience which nature that she now gained the composure every woman must go through some time, oft- with which even the weakest soul can someen many times during her life. For it is to times meet death, and had grown not unworwomen that all look in their extreme hour, thy of the dignity of a Christian's dying, Very few men, even the tenderest hearted, are Suddenly she shivered. "I am afraid; I able to watch by the last struggle and close never thought of-this. Will nobody come the eyes of the dving.

For the moment, as she glanced round the Oh, how Elizabeth longed for Miss Hilary, darkened room, and then at the still figure on for any body, who would have known what to the bed, Elizabeth's courage failed. Strong say to the dying woman; who perhaps, as her love might have overcome this fear—the natu- look and words implied, till this hour had ral recoil of youth and life from coming into never thought of dying. Once it crossed the contact with death and mortality; but love servant's mind to send for some clergyman; was not exactly the bond between her and but she knew none, and was aware that Mrs. Mrs. Ascott. It was rather duty, pity, the Ascott did not either. She had no superstitenderness that would have spring up in her tious feeling that any clergyman would do; heart toward any body she had watched and just to give a sort of spiritual extreme unction tended so long.

G05.72/197....

now, had stolen away, and was busy in the parting, Mrs. Ascott's white lips whispered, next room, seeing various young women whom "Pray. the doctors had sent, one of whom was to sup- Elizabeth had no words, except those which whom it would never know.

upon her, smothered down her fears, and sat -to the endby the bedside waiting for the least expression After it Mrs. Ascott lay very quiet. At of returning reason in the sunken face, which length she said, "Please—bring—my—baby." was very quiet now.

Consciousness did return at last, as the doc-\"my" baby. A.Beszeria grows less awful—a fellow creature slowly pas- might have disturbed the peace which, mercising from this life into the life unknown.

Elizabeth crept up to the other side. The change, undescribable yet unmistakable, which will watch over baby, and give him back to

The tone was submissive, half-inquiring; Never yet had Elizabeth seen death. Her like that of a child learning something it had and speak to me?"

to the departing soul. Her own religious faith "If she should die, die in the night, before was of such an intensely personal silent kind, Miss Hilary comes!" thought the poor girl, that she did not believe in any good to be deand glanced once more around the shadowy rived from a strange gentleman coming and room, where she was now left quite alone. For praying by the bedside of a stranger, repeating nurse, thinking with true worldly wisdom of set sayings with a set countenance, and going the preservation of the "son and heir," which away again. And yet with that instinct which was decidedly the most important question comes to almost every human soul, fast de-ply to the infant the place of the poor mother Miss Leaf used to say night after night in the little parlor at Stowbury. She knelt down, There was nobody left but herself to watch and in a trembling voice repeated in her misthis dying mother, so Elizabeth took her lot tress's ear-" Our Father which art in heaven"

It had been from the first, and was to the last,

she might kiss it.

yet, poor little fellow!" And the strong nut-did know the full history of things except Eliural agony came upon her, conquering even zabeth, and she kept it to herself. So the the weakness of her last hour. "Oh, it's hard, family skeleton was buried quietly in Mrs. Will nobody teach my baby to remem- Ascott's grave. hard! ber me?"

caught hold of nurse.

care of baby. Promise, Elizabeth. Johanna and provided them with the deepest and handis old—Hilary may be married; you will take somest mourning. He even, in a formal way, care of my baby?"

Hand.

most another hour stood beside the bed thus, back to their old life at Richmond, and the until nurse whispered, "Carry it away; its widower returned to his solitary bachelor ways.

mother doesn't know it now."

ers as if in search of something. Baby was seemed to have passed away from him like a still asleep, but Elizabeth contrived, by kneel-dream. ing down close to the bed, to put the tiny hand. Not altogether a dream. Gradually he beunder those cold fingers; they closed immegan to awake to the consciousness of an occa diately upon it, and so remained till the last. |sional child's cry in the house—that large, did not disturb the mother now.

mother. It may have been better so.

CHAPTER XXV.

"IN MEMORY OF SELINA,

THE EXLOYED WIFE OF PETER ASCOTT, ESQ.. OF BUSSELL SQUARE, LONDON. AND DAUGTER OF THE LATE HENRY LEAF, ESQ.,

OF THIS TOWN. PIED DECEMBER 24, 1839. AGED 41 YEARS."

Such was the inscription which now, for six definite sums of money to expend upon the months, had met the eyes of the inhabitants nursery. of Stowbury, on a large, dazzlingly white mar-church-yard of the New Church.

showing how rich he had become, and of join-at Russell Square. ing his once humble name, even on a tomb. And so, during the long summer months, stone, with one of the oldest names in the the motherless child, in its deep mourningannals of Stowbury-nobody could find out, which looks so pathetic on a very young baby Probably nobody cared.

. The small face was laid close to hers that strong but not exaggerated grief at his loss; if any remorse mingled therewith, Selina's sis-"He looks well; he does not miss me much ters happily did not know it. Nobody ever

Peter Ascott showed, in his coarse fashion, And then lifting herself up on her elbow she much sympathy and consideration for his wife's sisters. He had them staying in the "Tell Mr. Ascott that Elizabeth is to take house till a week after the funeral was over, took counsel with them as to the carrying out "I will—as long as I live," said Elizabeth of Mrs. Ascott's wishes, and the retaining of Elizabeth in charge of the son and heir, which She took the child in her arms, and for al-was accordingly settled. And then they went He looked as usual; went to and from the But she did; for she feebly moved her fing-City as usual: and his brief married life

When Miss Leaf and Miss Hilary came in, silent, dreary house, where he was once more Elizabeth was still kneeling there, trying softly the sole, solitary master. Sometimes, when to take the little hand away: for the baby had he came in from church of Sundays, he would wakened and began its piteous wail. But it mount another flight of stairs, walk into the nursery at the top of the house, and stare with "Poor Selina" was no more. Nothing of distant curiosity at the little creature in Elizher was left to her child except the name of a abeth's arms, pronounce it a "fine child, and aid her great credit!" and then walk down again. He never seemed to consider it as his child, this poor old bachelor of so many years'. standing; he had outgrown apparently all sense of the affections or the duties of a father. Whether they ever would come into him: whether, after babyhood was passed, he would begin to take an interest in the little creature who throve and blossomed into beauty-which, as if watched by guardian angels, dead mothers' children often seem to do-was a source of earnest speculation to Elizabeth.

In the mean time he treated both her and the baby with extreme consideration, allowed her to do just as she liked, and gave her in-

When summer came, and the doctor ordered ble monument, the first that was placed in the change of air, Mr. Ascott consented to her suggestion of taking a lodging for herself and baby What motive induced Mr. Ascott to inter his near baby's aunts at Richmond; only desirwife here—whether it was a natural wish to lay ing that the lodging should be as handsome as her, and some day lay beside her, in their na-could be secured, and that every other Sunday tive earth; or the less creditable desire of she should bring up his son to spend the day

-might be seen carried about in Elizabeth's The Misses Leaf were content that he should arms every where. When, after the first six do as he pleased in the matter: he had shown weeks, the wet nurse left—in fact, two or three took little Henry solely under her own charge, the dead of night, the two women, mistress She had comparatively small experience, but and maid, by some chance, said a few things she had common sense, and the strong moth- to one another which never might have been erly instinct which comes by nature to some said in the daylight, and which, by tacit conwomen. Besides, her whole soul was wrap sent, were never afterward referred to by eithped up in this little child.

From the hour when, even with her mistress a dream. dying before her eyes. Elizabeth had felt a strange thrill of comfort in the new duty which emotion, all that had happened between herhad come into her blank life, she took to this self and Tom, and how he was married to Esduty as women only can whose life has become ther Martin. And then both women went a blank. She received the child as a blessing back, in a moralizing way, to the days when sent direct from God; by unconscious hands they had both been "young" at Stowbury, and -for Mrs. Ascott knew nothing of what hap how different life was from what they then pened: something that would heal her wound- thought and looked forward to-Miss Hilary ed heart, and make her forget Tom.

And so it did. Women and mothers well know how engrossing is the care of an infant: "things are indeed not as people fancy when how each minute of the day is filled up with they are girls. We dream, and dream, and "fretting" about extraneous things becomes nobody sees but God. I often wonder how my quite impossible. How gradually the fresh life will end." life growing up and expanding puts the worn out or blighted life into the back ground, and sure you would be married, Miss Hilary. all the hopes and fancies cling around the There was one person—Is he alive still? small, beautiful present, the ever developing, he ever coming home?" the ever marvelous mystery of a young child's existence! Why it should be so, we can only guess; but that it is so, many a wretched wite, he looked like a good man." many a widowed mother, many a broken hearted, forlorn aunt. has thankfully proved.

so she sank, quietly and at once, into the condition of a middle aged woman, whose life's a sudden and great darkness which had come over her own.

cott's funeral. Of course, the household knew his letters had suddenly ceased, without any every thing; but nobody condoled with Eliza. explanation, his last being exactly the same as about her which made them hold their tongues, as cheerful and brave. They treated her with much respect, as her to in the most distant way, except once.

lodgings on Richmond Hill, and slept in the ular in all his habits to be guilty of those acnursery, Elizabeth making up for herself a bed cidental negligences by which wanderers wet nurses successively were abolished—she'on the floor close beside baby and cradle. In er, any more than if they had been spoken in

> Elizabeth told briefly, though not without and her "bower maiden."

> "Yes," answered the former with a sigh. think we see very far into the future, which

> Elizabeth said, after a pause, "I always felt

"I don't know."

"I am sure he was very fond of you.

"He was the best man I ever knew."

This was all Miss Hilary said, and she said Elizabeth proved it likewise. She did not it softly and mournfully. She might never exactly lose all memory of her trouble, but it have said it at all: but it dropped from her seemed lighter: it was swallowed up in this second passion of adopted motherhood. And when her heart was tender over Elizabeth's

For Esther had left and been married to Literally, shedid not now know whether Ro-Tom Cliffe within a few week's of Mrs. As bern Lyon were alive or dead. Two months ago There was a certain stand-off ishness the others—as frank, as warmly affectionate,

One solution to this was his possible coming new position demanded. She took this, as she home. But she did not, after careful reasontook every thing, with the grave quietness ing on the subject, believe that likely. She which was her fashion from her youth up; knew exactly his business relations with his assumed her place as a confidential upper ser-lemployers; that there was a fixed time for vant: dressed well but soberly, like a woman his return to England, which nothing except of forty, and was called "Mrs. Hand." the very strongest necessity could alter. Even The only trace her "disappointment" left in the chance of his health breaking, so as to upon her was a slightly bitter way of speak-incapacitate him for work, he should, he aling about men in general, and a dislike to any ways said, have to go to the hills, rather than chatter about love affairs and matrimony, take the voyage home prematurely. And in Her own story she was never known to refer that case he certainly would have informed his friends of his movements. There was no-Miss Hilary—who, of course, had heard all, thing erratic, or careless, or eccentric about but delicately kept silence—one night, when Robert Lyon; he was a practical, business. little Henry was not well, remained in the like Scotchman—far too cautious and too regabroad sometimes cause such cruel anxieties seeking; that, however dear a man may be to sibility-his death-was not likely to have sharpest agony of anxiety concerning him, happened without their hearing of it. Hilary Hilary felt that she could not, on her part, telt sure, with the strong confidence of love, take any step that seemed to compel love-or that he would have taken every means to leave even friendship-from Robert Lyon. It was not her some last word--some farewell token-pride, she could hardly be called a proud wowhich would reach herafter he was gone, and man; it was an innate seuse of the dignity of comfort her with the assurance of what, living, that love which, as a free gift, is precious as he had never plainly told. Sometimes, when "much fine gold," yet becomes the merest dross, a wild terror of his death seized her, this set-jutterly and insulting poor-when paid as a debt tled conviction drove it back again. He must of honor, or offered as a benevolent largess. be living, or she would have heard.

lence, which many would have considered the patiently at her desk; interested herself in the most probable of all—he might be married young people over whom she ruled: became Not deliberately, but suddenly: drawn into it Miss Balquidder's right hand in all sorts of by some of those impelling trains of circum-schemes which that good woman was forever stance which are the cause of so many mar-carrying out for the benefit of her fellow-creariages, especially with men; or, impelled by tures: and at leisure times occupied herself one of those violent passions which occasional with Johanna, or with Elizabeth and the baly seize on an exceedingly good man, fascina-by, trying to think it was a very beautiful and ting him against his conscience, reason, and happy world, with love still in it, and a God will, until he wakes up to find himself fettered of love ruling over it—only, onlyand rained for life. Such things do happen, strangely, pitifully often. The like might pride. Many a day she felt as if she could have happened to Robert Lyon.

her common sense told her that it was possi-sight of Robert Lyon. she looked on the world with the eyes of a It was November, and yet the air felt mild as woman of thirty; and though, thank Heaven! May, and the sunshine had that peculiar genthe romance had never gone out of her—the ial brightness which autumnal sunshine alone faith, and trust, and tender love-still it had possesses; even as, perhaps, late happiness sobered down a little. She knew it was quite has in it a holy calm and sweetness which no within the bounds of possibility that a young youthful ecstasy can ever boast. man, separated from her for seven years. The day happened to be Hilary's birthday. thrown into all kinds of circumstances and She had taken a holiday, which she, Johanamong all sorts of people, should have changed na, Elizabeth, and the baby, had spent in very much in himself, and, consequently, to-Richmond Park, watching the rabbits darting ward her. That, without absolute faithless about under the brown fern, and the deer graness, he might suddenly have seen some other zing contentedly hard by. They had sat a woman he liked better, and have married at long time under one of the oak trees with once. Or, if he came back unmarried—she which the Park abounds, listening for the sudhad taught herself to look this probability also den drop, drop of an occasional acorn among steadily in the face-he might find the reality the fallen leaves: or making merry with the of her—Hilary Leaf—different from his re-child, as a healthy, innocent, playful child almembrance of her; and so, without actual ways can make good women merry. falseness to the old true love, might not love her any more.

desired to break.

her, she refuses to drop into his mouth like an For the same reason, the other terrible pos-loverripe peach from a garden wall. In her

And so, though oftentimes her heart felt There was another interpretation of the si breaking, Hilary labored on; sat the long day

Women are very humble in their cruelest have crawled a hundred miles in the dust-Hilary did not actually believe it, but still like some Catholic pilgrim-just to get one

She was not an inexperienced girl now: Autumn came-lovely and lingering late.

Still, Master Henry was not a remarkable specimen of infanthood, and had never occu-These tears made her resolutely oppose Jo-, pied more than his proper nepotal corner in hanna's wish to write to the house of business Hilary's heart. She left him chiefly to Elizat Liverpool, and ask what had become of abeth, and to his aunt Johanna, in whom the Mr. Lyon. It seemed like seeking after him, grandmotherly character had blossomed out trying to hold him by the slender chain which in full perfection. And when these two behe had never attempted to make any stronger, came engrossed in his infant majesty, Hilary and which, already, he might have broken, or sat a little apart, unconsciously folding her ther hands and fixing her eyes on vacancy:

She could not do it. Something forbade becoming fearfully alive to the sharp truth, her; that something in the inmost depths of that of all griefs, a strong love unreturned or a woman's nature which makes her feel her unfulfilled is the grief which most blights a own value, and exact that she shall be sought; woman's life. Say, rather, any human life: that, if her love be worth having, it is worth but it is worst to a woman, because she must necessarily endure passively. So enduring, it recognized him as Robert Lyon. But for all is very difficult to recognize the good hand of that it was himself: it was Robert Lyon. God therein. Why should He ordain longings, Nobody screamed, nobody fainted. People neither selfish nor unholy, which yet are nev-seldom do that in real life, even when a friend er granted: tenderness which expends itself turns up suddenly from the other end of the in vain: sacrifices which are wholly unheed-world. They only hold out a warm hand, and ed; and sufferings which seem quite thrown look silently in one another's faces, and try to away? That is, if we dared allege of any believe that all is real, as these did. thing in the moral or in the material world, Robert Lyon shook hands with both ladies, where so much loveliness, so much love, ar-one after the other, Hilary last, then placed pear continually wasted, that it is really himself between them. "thrown away." We never know through "Miss Leaf, will you what divine mysteries of compensation the Great Father of the universe may be carrying himself, that in a moment all these intervenout his sublime plan: and those three words, ing years seemed crushed into an atom of time. "God is love," ought to contain, to every Hilary felt certain, morally and absolutely doubting soul, the solution of all things.

was a shadow on her sweet face, a listless them all good-by that Sunday night in the weariness in her movements, which caught parlor at Stowbury. The same, even in his Johanna's attention. Johanna had been very love for herself, though he had simply drawn good to her child. When, do what she would, her little hand under his arm, and never spo-Hilary could not keep down fits of occasional ken a single word. dullness or impatience, it was touching to see how this woman of over sixty years slipped lowest knees, and thank God! Repent of all from her due pedestal of honor and dignity, to your hitterness, doubts, and pains; he joyful be patient with her younger sister's unspoken be joyful! But, oh, remember to be so humble bitterness and incommunicable care.

She now, seeing how restless Hilary was, rose when she rose, put her arm in hers, and She was. As she walked silently along by accompanied her, speaking or silent, with Robert Lyon's side, she pulled down her veil quick steps or slow, as she chose, across the to hide the sweetest, most contrite, most childbeautiful park, than which, perhaps, all Eng-like tears. What did she deserve, more than land can not furnish a scene more thoroughly her neighbors, that she should be so very, very sylvan, thoroughly English. They rested on that high ground near the gate of Pembroke the park, she saw the dark, solitary figure of Lodge, where the valley of the Thames lies Elizabeth carrying baby, she quietly guided spread out like a map, stretching miles and her companions into a different path, so as to miles away in luxuriant greenery.

er would think of this view? Or any one who "I only landed last night at Southampton," had been long abroad? How inexpressibly Mr. Lyon explained to Miss Leaf, after the eaw at once what her words had implied. She details. "I came by the Overland Mail. It felt so sorry, so vexed with herself: but it was a sudden journey. I had scareely more was best to leave it alone. So they made their than a few hours' notice. The cause of it way homeward, speaking of something else: was some very unpleasant defalcations in our and then that happened which Johanna had tirm." been almost daily expecting would happen, Under any other circumstances Hilary though she dared not communicate her hopes might have smiled; maybe she did smile, to Hilary, lest they might prove fallacious. and tease him many a time afterward, because might have attracted any one's attention: they ter seven years' absence, was "defalcations in eaught that of a gentlement, who was walking our tirm. But now she listened gravely, and quickly and looking about him, as if in search by and-by took her part in the unimportant of something. He passed them at a little dis-conversation which always occurs after such tance, then repassed, then turned, holding out a meeting as this.

both his hands.

"Miss Leaf; I was sure it was you." was so changed that Hilary herself would cer-only a few hours to stay. To night I must go tainly have passed him in the street, that on to Liverpool." brown, foreign looking, middle aged man, nor "But we shall hope soon to see you again?"

"Miss Leaf, will you take my arm?"

The tone, the manner, were so exactly like certain, that, in spite of all outward change, As Hilary rose from under the tree there he was the same Robert Lyon who had bade avoid meeting, lest the sight of her happiness "How beautiful! I wonder what a foreign- might in any way, hurt poor Elizabeth.

> Hilary Leaf, down, secretly, on your heart's withal.

sweet and home-like it would seem to him!" fashion people have, at such meetings, of fall-Hilary turned sharply away, and Johanna ing upon the most practical and uninteresting

The two figures, both in deep mourning, the first thing he could find to talk about, af-

"Were you going home. Miss Leaf? They told me at your house you were expected to Only the voice; every thing else about him dinner. May I come with you? for I have pride, or whatever it was; so like his old self, clings to it, and cherishes it with a tenacity that it made somebody smile! But somebody that laughs to scorn the grim dread of "growloved it. Somebody lifted up to his face eyes ing old." of silent welcome; sweet, soft, brown eyes, where never, since he knew them, had he seen middle age, in his gray hairs, in the painful, one cloud of anger darken, one shadow of un-anxious, half melancholy expression which kindness rise.

I do not intrude to-day."

"This is something worth coming home to," he said in a low voice, and not over lucidly.

Ay, it was.

"I am by no means disinterested in the days at Stowbury. matter of dinner, Miss Leaf: for I have no doubt of finding good English roast beef and sense talked about people having been "young plum pudding on your sister's birth day.-Happy returns of the day, Miss Hilary."

She was so touched by his remembering this, that, to hide it, she put on a spice of her old mischievousness, and asked him if he was aware how old she was?

"Yes: you are thirty: I have known you for fifteen years."

"It is a long time," said Johanna, thought-

Johanna would not have been human had she not been a little thoughtful and silent on the way home, and had she not many times, out of the corners of her eyes, sharply investigated Mr. Robert Lyon.

He was much altered: there was no doubt change any body; take the youthfulness out sewing. Johanna had just gone out of the of any body. It was so with Robert Lyon. When coming into the parlor he removed his hat, many a white thread was visible in his benefit of the doubt; she was a generous wohair, and besides the spare, dried-up look man. which is always noticeable in people who have expression in his face, indicating many a sided. That exceeding sense of rest which she out leaving scars behind.

the same fact in another it startles us. Hilary way. had scarcely recognized how far she herself had left her girlish days behind till she saw was, especially now when coming up to her Robert Lyon.

he, guessing by his curiously swift intuition of more explicitly, of what had happened to her old what she was thinking of.

"Yes, a good deal changed," she answered truthfully; at which he was silent.

could—all the emotion that swelled in hers as parlor. "And about the shop?" she looked at him, the love of her youth, no longer young. How the ghostly likeness of the former face gleamed out under the hard short-not that I could expect more. Stillworn lines of the face that now was touching nowe if you will trust me-tell me all." her with ineffable tenderness. Also, with sol- Hilary turned to him, her friend for fifteen

"I hope so. And I trust, Miss Leaf, that emu content came a sense of the entire indestructibleness of that love which through all He said this with his Scotch shyness, or decay or alteration traces the ideal image still,

> In his premature and not specially comely occasionally flitted across his features, as if life had gone hard with him, Robert Lyon was a thousand times dearer to her than when the world was all before them both in the early

There is a great deal of a sentimental non together." Not necessarlly is that a bond. Many a tie formed in youth dwindles away and breaks off naturally in maturer years. Characters alter, circumstances divide. one will dare to allege that there may not be loves and triendships formed in middle life as dear, as close, as firm as any of those of youth; perhaps, with some temperaments, infinitely more so. But when the two go together, when the calm election of maturity confirms the early instinct, and the lives have been parallel, as it were, for many years, there can be no bond like that of those who say as these two did, "We were young together."

He said so when, after dinner, he came and Seven years of Indian life would stood by the window where Hilary was sitting room: whether intentionally or not, this history can not avouch. Let us give her the

During the three hours that Mr. Lyon had lived long in hot climates, there was an "old" been with her, Hilary's first agitation had subworldly battle fought and won, but not with had always felt beside him—the sure index of people who, besides loving, are meant to guide Even Hilary, as she sat opposite to him, at and help and bless one another—returned as table, could not but feel that he was no longer strong as ever. That deep affection which a young man either in appearance or reality, should underlie alt love revived and clung to We ourselves grow old, or older, without him with a chidlike confidence strengthening knowing it, but when we suddenly come upon at every word he said, every familiar look and

He was by no means so composed as she side and watching her hands moving for a "You think me very much changed?" said minute or so, he asked her to tell him, a little since they parted.

"Things are rather different from what I thought;" and he glanced with a troubled air He could not read—perhaps no man's heart round the neat but very humbly furnished

"Johanna told you."

"Yes; but her letters have been so few, *0

years. He was that if he was nothing more, youth, captivated by every fresh face it sees, the last year or two, and then added:

words. It cut Robert Lyon to the heart.

"You suffered, and I never knew it."

"I never meant you to know."

sunk under it: suppose you had died, or been nothing, and yet giving all. driven to do what many a woman does for the Such was his love—this brave, plain sposake of mere bread and a home-what your ken, single hearted Scotsman. Would that poor sister did-married. But I beg your there were more such men and more such love pardon."

For Hilary had started up with her face all

ed, but I should never have married."

comprehending, then said humbly, though man. But this secret Robert Lyon had evirather formally, right to allude to any thing of the kind."

"I beg your pardon once more. I had no unworthy of such a possession.

close together, they were further apart than in time--l'll not hurry you--but in time, do when the Indian seas rolled between them.

paler: he pressed his lips hard together; they eves. Smiling as they were, there was pathos moved once or twice, but still he did not utter in them; the sadness left by those long years a word. At last, with a sort of desperate of hidden suffering, now forever ended. courage, and in a tone that Hilary had never "I have loved you all my life," said Hilheard from him in her life before, he said:

"Yes, I believe I have a right, the right that every man has when his whole happiness depends upon it, to ask you one question. You know every thing concerning me; you always have known: I meant that you should-I have taken the utmost care that you should. There's whatever concerning you."

I mean, are you engaged to be married?"

"No."

"Thank God!"

hands and did not speak for a long time.

hard to him to speak out—he told her, at least character-this is the rarest thing to be found he somehow made her understand, how he on earth, and the most precious. ad loved her. No light fancy of sentimental | I do not say that all love is worthless which ,

And he had been very true: he deserved to be putting upon each me the coloring of his own trusted. She told him, in brief, the history of imagination, and adorning not what is, but what itself creates: no sudden, selfish, sensu-"But after all it is hardly worth the telling, ous passion, caring only to attain its object, because, you see, we are very comfortable now, irrespective of reason, right, or conscience; Poor Ascott, we suppose, must be in Australia, but the strong deep love of a just man, delib-I earn enough to keep Johanna and myself, erately choosing one woman as the best woand Miss Balifuidder is a good friend to us. man out of all the world, and setting himself We have repaid her, and owe nobody any resolutely to win her. Battling for her sake thing. Still, we have suffered a great deal, with all hard fortune; keeping, for her sake; Two years ago; oh! it was a dreadful time." his heart pure from all the temptations of the She was hardly aware of it, but her candid world: never losing sight of her; watching tell-tale face betrayed more even than her over her so far as he could, consistently with the sense of honor (or masculine pridewhich was it? Lat Hary forgave it, any how) which made aim resemtely compel himself to "Why not?" He walked the room in great silence; holding her perfectly free, while he excitement. "I ought to have been told; it held himself bound. Bound by a faithfulness was cruel not to tell me. Suppose you had perfect as that of the knights of old—asking

in the world! •

Few women could have resisted it, certainly not Hilary, especially with a little secret of "No," she cried; "no poverty would have her own lying perduat the bottom of her heart; sunk me as low as that. I might have stary-that "sleeping angel" whence half her strength and courage had come; the noble, faithful. Robert Lyon looked at her, evidently un-generous love of a good woman for a good dently never guessed, or deemed himself wholly

He took her hand at last, and held it firmly. Hilary replied not. It seemed as it now. "And now that you know all, do you think you think I could make you love me?"

Mr. Lyon's brown cheek turned paler and She looked up in his face with her honest arv.

CHAPTER XXVI.

LET us linger a little over this chapter of is not a bit of my life that has not been as open happy love: so sweet, so rare a thing. Aye, to you as if—as if—. But I know nothing mest rare: though hundreds continually meet, love, or fancy they do, engage themselves, and "What do you wish to know?" she fullered, marry: and hundreds more go through the "Seven years is a long time. Are you free? same proceeding, with the slight difference of the love omitted---Hamlet, with the part of (Hamlet left out. But the real love, steady and true: tried in the balance, and not found He dropped his head down between his wanting: tested by time, silence, separation: by good and ill fortune: by the natural and And then with difficulty—for it was always inevitable change which years make in every been people who have succumbed instantly and deal changed, outwardly and inwardly. permanently to some mysterious attraction, had mixed much in society, taken an excelhigher than all reasoning: the same which lent position therein, and this had given him made Hilary "take an interest" in Robert itot only a more polished manner, but an air Lyon's tace at church, and made him, he af-of decision and command, as of one used to be terward confessed, the very first time he gave obeyed. There could not be the slightest Ascott a lesson in the parlor at Stowbury, say doubt, as Johanna once laughingly told him, to himself, "If I did marry, I think I should that he would always be "master in his own like such a wife as that brown eyed bit lassie." house." And there have been other people, who choosing their partners from accidental circumstan-man" as he called her. He would sit for hours ces, or from mean worldly motives, have at the "ingle-neuk"-how he did luxuriate in tound Providence kinder to them than they the English fires!-with Hilary on a footstool deserved, and settled down into happy, affec-beside him, her arm resting on his knee, or tionate husbands and wives.

the sweetness, the completeness of such a love stoop and gather her close to his heart. But as that between Hilary Leaf and Robert I shall tell no tales; the world has no business

There was nothing very romantic about it. From the moment when Johanna entered the ness; she disliked any demonstrations thereof, parlor, found them standing hand-in-hand at even before Johanna. And when Miss Balthe fireside, and Hilary came forward and quidder, who had, of course, been told of the kissed her, and after a slight hesitation Robert engagement, came down one day expressly to did the same, the affair proceeded in most mill- see her "fortunate fellow countryman," this pond fashion:

"Unruffied by those cataracts and breaks, That humor interposed too often makes.

There were no lovers' quarrels: Robert Ly-|" looked at." on had chosen that best blessing next to a good woman, a sweet tempered woman; and miss you terribly, my dear," said the old there was no reason why they should quarrel Scotchwoman. But it's an ill wind that blows more as lovers than they had done as friends. nobody good, and I have another young lady And, let it be said to the eternal honor of both, quite ready to step into your shoes. When now, no more than in their friendship days, shall you be married?" was there any of that hungry engrossment of each other's society, which is only another time," said Hilary, glancing at Johanna. torm of selfishness, and by which lovers so often make their own happy courting time a lent." season of never-to-be-forgotten bitterness to ingly good: she saw her child happy, and she the firm being settled, in six months hence he still persisted in doing ner daily duty in the answer, hardly even to think. She let the sister than he did with the younger, and recognizing such a thing as the future. sometimes declared solemnly that if Hilary offer to Johanna!

er had any thing to conceal; neither had ever marry him. loved any but the other.

is not exactly this sort of love. There have Robert Lyon was, as I have said, a good

But he was very gentle with his "little woher hand fast clasped in his. And sometimes, But none of these loves can possibly have when Johanna went out of the room, he would > with these sort of things. Hilary was very shy of parading her happi-Machavelian little woman actually persuaded her lover to have an important engagement in She could not bear him to be London!

> "Ah, well, you must leave me, and I will

"I don't know-hush: we'll talk another

Miss Balquidder took the hint and was si-

That important question was indeed begin-Johanna suffered a little: all people do ming to weigh heavily on Hilary's mind. She when the new rights clash with the old ones; was fully aware of what Mr. Lyon wished, and but she rarely betrayed it. She was exceedingly good: she can be a little from being certified in the form being certified in the form being certified. loved Robert Lyon dearly. He was very returned to India, he should not return alone. mindful of her, very tender: and as Hilary When he said this, she had never dared to shop, he spent more of his time with the elder peaceful present float on, day by day, without

But this could not be always. It came to did not treat him welt he intended to make an an end one January afternoon, when he had returned from a second absence in Liverpool. Oh, the innumerable little jokes of those They were walking up Richmond Hill. happy days! Oh, the long, quiet walks by sun had set frostily and red over the silver the river side, through the park, across Ham curve of the Thames, and Venus, large and Common-any where-it did not matter; the bright, was shining like a great eye in the whole world looked lovely, even on the dull- western sky. Hilary long remembered exactest winter day! Oh, the endless talks; the ly how every thing looked, even to the very renewed mingling of two lives, which, though tree they stood under, when Robert Lyon askdivided, had never been really apart, for neith-ed her to fix definitely the day that she would

Would she consent—there seemed no special reason to the contrary—that it should be was only a man, not an angel; and though he immediately? Or would she like to remain made comparatively little show of it, he was a with Johanna as she was, till just before they man very deeply in love. With that jealous sailed? He wished to be as good as possible tenacity over his treasure, hardly blamable, to Johanna-still-" since the love is worth little which does not

And something in his manner impressed wish to have its object "all to itself." he had, I Hilary more than ever before with the convictant afraid, contemplated not without pleasure tion of all she was to him; likewise, all he the carrying off of Hilary to his Indian home; was to her. More, much more than even a and it had cost him something to propose that few short weeks since. Then, intense as it Johanna should go too. He was very fond of was, the love had a dream like unreality; now Johanna; stillit was close, home-like, familiar. Instinctive-If I tell what followed will it forever lower ly she clung to his arm; she had become so Robert Lyon in the estimation of all readers? used to being Robert's darling now. She He said, coldly, "As you please, Hilary:" shivered as she thought of the wide seas roll-rose up, and never spoke another word till ing between them; of the time when she they reached home.

daily fireside, and find him no more. known; the first time Hilar7 had ever looked "Robert, I want to talk to you about Jo-at that dear face, and seen an expression there should look for him at the daily meal and hanna." which made her look away again. He did "I guess what it is," said he, smiling; not sulk; he was too gentlemanly for that; "you would like her to go out to India with he even exerted himself to make the meal pass us. Certainly, if she chooses. I hope you pleasantly as usual: but he was evidently did not suppose I should object." deeply wounded; nay, more, displeased. The

It was the first dull tea table they had ever

Will it inflict a death blow upon any admiration she may have excited, this brave little self: who did not shrink from traversing Lon-

and she, looking upon him as her future hus-

"No: but it is not that. She would not live strong, stern man's nature within him had six months in a hot climate: the doctor tells rebelled: the sweetness had gone out of his face, and something had come into it which "You consulted him?" the very best of men have sometimes: alas for "Yes, confidentially, without her knowing the woman who cannot understand and put up it. But I thought it right, I wanted to make with it! quite sure before—before— Oh, Robert.,' I am not going to preach the doctrine of ty-

me so."

The grief of her tone caused him to suspect rants and slaves; but when two walk together what was coming. He started. they must be agreed, or if by any chance they

"You don't mean that? Oh no, you can are not agreed, one must yield. It may not My little woman, my own little woman always he the weaker, or in wakness may lie -she could not be so unkind. the chiefest strength: but it must be one or

Hilary turned sick at heart. The dim land-other of the two who has to be the first to scape, the bright sky, seemed to mingle and give way: and, save in very exceptional cases, dance before her, and Venus to stare at her it is, and it ought to be, the woman. God's with a piercing, threatening, baleful lustre. Haw and nature's, which is also God's, ordains

"Robert, let me sit down on the bench, this; instinct teaches it: Christianity enforces and sit you beside me. It is too dark for it.

people to notice us, and we shall not be very

"No, my darling;" and he slipped his plaid Hilary, who fought through the world by herround her shoulders, and his arm with it.

She looked up pitifully. "Don't be vexed don streets alone at seemly and unseemly with me, Robert, dear: I have thought it all hours: from going into sponging houses and over: weighed it on every side; nights and debtor's prisons: from earning her own livelinights I have been awake pondering what was hood, even in a shop—if I confess that Robert right to do. And it always comes to the same Lyon, being angry with her, justly or unjustly, thing."

"What?" band, her "lord and master" if you will, "It's the old story," she answered with a whom she would one day promise, and intend-"I canna leave my minnie,' ed, literally "to obey"—she thought it her There is nobody in the world to take care of duty, not only her pleasure but her duty, to be Johanna but me, not even Elizabeth, who is the first to make reconciliation between them? engrossed in little Henry. If I left her, I am ay, and at every sacrifice, except that of prinsure it would kill her. And she can not come ciple. And I am afraid, in spite of all that "strong-

Dear!" (the only fond name she ever called him) "for these three years—you minded" women may preach to the contrary, say it need only be three years-you will have that all good women will have to do this to all to go back to India alone." men who stand in any close relation toward love, and holy domestic influence; and that do, and I made a mistake; that is all." so it must be to the end of time.

Robert Lyon was a very good man; but he them, whether fathers, husbands, brothers, or

thing was amiss; but she was too wise to take continually make about women; they can not any notice, and being more than usually feeble that day, immediately after tea she went to lie it is not love at all, but merely a selfish carher pillows, and covered her up, Johanna drew any other duty, or blunts in us any other saher child's face close to her and whispered,

"That will do, love. Don't stay with me.

count."

Hilary all but broke down; and yet the tio's ominous warning to Othellowords made her stronger, firmer: set more clearly before her the solemn duty which young tolks in love are so apt to forget, that there can be no blessing on the new tie, if for word Mr. Lyon was sorry, any how, the soft any thing short of inevitable necessity they let answer which followed it thrilled through evgo one link of the old.

ful feeling to be standing outside the door and hard to move. shrink from going in to him; to see him rise up formally, saying, "Perhaps he had better utes?" leave; and have to answer with equal formality, "Not unless you are obliged;" and tor not expect me to agree with you. him then, with a shallow pretence of being at not suppose I shall say it is right for you to ease, to take up a book and offer to read aloud forsake me." to her while she worked. He-who used always to set his face strongly against all sewing of evenings-because it deprived him tem-His "little woman" crept closer, and laid her porarily of the sweet eyes, and the little soft head on his breast: he clasped convulsively. hand. Oh, it was hard, hard!

Nevertheless, she sat still and tried to listen; so?" but the words went in at one ear and out at her throat began to swell, and she could not ceeding love. see her needle and thread. Yet still he went on reading. It was only when, by some blessed chance, turning to reach a paper cutter, he caught sight of her, that he closed the book together for conscience," said she smiling. and looked discomposed; not softened, only "You would not like me to tell you I did not discomposed.

Who shall Who shall be first to speak?

and it may have passed over.

I am not apologizing for Hilary the least in natural." I do not know even if she considthe world. ered whether it was her place or Robert's to make the first advance. Indeed, I fear she did a reproach; and something else, which need not consider it at all, but just acted upon 1m- not be more particularly explained, is safer pulse, because it was so cruel, so heart break-than either. It is possible Hilary tried the ing, to be at variance with him. But if she experiment, and then resumed her "say." had considered it I doubt not she would have done from duty exactly what she did by in-try to think for me. I have been Johanna's stinct—crept up to him as he sat at the fire-child for thirty years; she is entirely dependside, and laid her little hand on his.

still?"

"Not angry; I have no right to be."

"Yes, you would have if I had really done Have I?" wrong.

lovers, if they wish to preserve peace, and I thought you loved me better than I find you

Ay, he had made a mistake, but it was not Miss Leaf might have discovered that some that one. It was the other mistake that men understand that love is not worth having, that When Hilary followed her, arranged rying out of selfish desires, if it blinds us to cred tenderness. They can not see how she who is false in one relation may be false in I would not keep you from Robert on any ac- another; and that, true as human nature's truth, ay, and often fulfilling itself, is Brabau-

> "Look to her, Moor! have a good eye to see; She has deceived her father, and may thee."

Perhaps as soon as he had said the bitter ery nerve of the strong willed man—a man not ${ m Y}$ et, Robert— It was such a new and dread- easily ${ m made}$ angry, but ${ m when}$ he was, ${ m very}$

"Robert, will you listen to me for two min-

"For as long as you like, only you must Yoù сан

"I forsake you? Oh, Robert!"

Words are not always the wisest arguments.

"Oh, Hilary, how could you wound me

And in lieu of the discussion, a long silence the other; she retained nothing. By and by brooded over the fireside—the silence of ex-

"Now, Robert, may I talk to you?"

"Yes. Preach away, my little conscience." "It shall not be preaching, and it is not al-love Johanna?"

"Certainly not. I love her very much mycatch the passing angel's wing? One minute, self, only I prefer you, as is natural. Apparently vou do not prefer me, which may also be

"Robert!"

There are times when a laugh is better than

"Now, Robert put yourself in my place, and ent upon me. Her health is feeble: every "Robert, what makes you so angry with me year of her life is at least doubtful. If she lost me I think she would never live out the next three years. You would not like that?"

" No."

"In all divided duties like this somebody "You must judge for yourself. For me-|must suffer; the question is, which can suffer best? She is old and frail, we are young: she take out of the brief span of mortal life, and, is alone, we are two: she never had any hap-therefore, how far they are justifiable, for any piness in her life, except, perhaps me: and we thing short of absolute necessity, Heaven -oh how happy we are! I think, Robert, it knows.

In this case it was an absolutely necessity. would be better for us to suffer than poor Jo-Robert Lyon's position in "our firm," with nature of the man was roused; he was no pride of a man who has diligently worked his longer angry.

only three years."

arms round his neck, and looked at him, eve to nursed through a fever years ago, could coneve. "You know I am your very own, a piece veniently take his place abroad. of yourself, as it were: that when I let you go it is like tearing myself from myself: yet I ary and her sister, "accidental circumstances can bear it, rather than do, or let you do, in might occur to cause my return home before the smallest degree, a thing which is not the three years were out, but the act must be right."

Robert Lyon was not a man of many words: but he had the rare faculty of seeing a case clearly, without reference to himself, and of putting it clearly also, when necessary.

"It seems to me, Hilary, that this is hardly a matter of abstract right or wrong, or a good deal might be argued on my side of the subject. inquired, with a tremulous, hardly concealed It is more a case of personal conscience. The two are not always identical, though they look so at first: but they both come to the same result."

"And that is—"

"If my little woman thinks it right to act And let this be the law of our married life, if gether to the last day of parting. we ever are married," and he sighed, "that by allowing the other to do the same."

"Oh, Robert! how good you are."

with cheerful faces: and she never knew how in addition to their own fifty pounds a year, to much both had sacrificed for her sake. Once enable them to live comfortably without her only, when she was for a few minutes absent working any more. from the parlor, did Robert Lyon renew the subject, to suggest a medium course.

slie doubted him-she doubted herself. She would think the less of me because circumknew quite well by the pang that darted stances made me an independent woman, earnthrough her like a shaft of ice, as she telt his ing my own bread. Do you?" warm arm round her, and thought of the time when she would feel it no more, that, after she must never work any more. Johanna she had been Robert Lyon's happy wife for says right; it is a man's place, and not a wothree months, to let him go to India without man's. I will not allow it." her would be simply and utterly impossible.

Fast fled the months; they dwindled into submitted. weeks, and then into days. I shall not enlarge upon this time. Now, when the ends of the with her all the business part of their conworld have been drawn together, and every cerns, and to reconcile her to this partial defamily has one or more relatives abroad, a grief dependence upon him, which, he urged, was like Hilary's has become so common that only forestalling his rights; that before he first

"You little Jesuit," he said: but the higher which he identified himself with the natural way up to fortune, was such that he could not, "It is only for a short time, remember— without sacrificing his future prospects, and likewise what he felt to be a point of honor,

"And how can I do without you for three refuse to go back to Bombay until such time as his senior partner's son, the young fellow "Yes, Robert, you can." And she put her whom he had "coached" in Hindostanee, and > "Of course," he said, explaining this to Hilnone of mine; I must do my duty."

> "Yes, you must," answered Hilary, with a gleam lighting up her eyes. She loved so in him this one great principle of his life—the back-bone of it, as it were-duty before all things.

Johanna asked no questions. Once she had alarm, whether Robert wished to take Hilary back with him, and Hilary had kissed her, smilingly, saying, "No, that was impossible." Afterward the subject was never revived.

And so these two lovers, both stern in what as she does, I also think it right to let her, they thought their duty, went on silently to-

It was almost as quiet a day as that neverwhen we differ each should respect the other's to-be-forgotten Sunday at Stowbury. They conscience, and do right in the truest sense, went a long walk together, in the course of which Mr. Lyon forced her to agree to what hitherto she had steadfastly resisted that she So these two, an hour after, met Johanna and Johanna should accept from him Fnough,

"Are you ashamed of my working?" she asked, with something between a tear and a But Hilary resolutely refused. Not that smile. "Sometimes I used to be afraid you

"My darling, no. I am proud of her. But

When he spoke in that tone Hilary always

He told her another thing while arranging nearly every one can, in degree, understand it. quitted England, seven years ago, he had made How bitter such partings are, how much they his will, leaving her, if still unmarried, his position that she would have been had she and Johanna were sitting together in their parbeen his wife.

befall my Hilary."

sense of this was so strong that it took away that she hoped still to help her-Miss Balthe sharpness of the parting, made her feel, up quidder-in any way she could point out that to the very last minute, when she clung to would be useful to others. . She wished, in her him-was pressed close to him-heart to heart humble way, as a sort of thank offering from

When he was really gone—when, as she sat with her tearless eyes fixed on the closed door whose failing eye sight refused all candle light -Johanna softly touched her, saying, "My occupation, and then came and sat beside her child!" then Hilary learned it all.

The next twenty-four hours will hardly but she was very quiet now. bear being writen about. Most people know "We must go to bed early," was all she what it is to miss the face out of the house—said. the life out of the heart. To come and go, to ent and drink, to lie down and rise, and find all things the same, and gradually to recognize fond way, making no attempt to console her, that it must be the same, indefinitely, perhaps but only to love her-always the safest conalways. To be met continually by small tri-solation. And Hilary was thankful that nevtles-a dropped glove, a book, a scrap of er, even in her sharpest agonies of grief, had or at least assumed, the cruel craving for one word more—one kiss more—for only one five hanna sank into the possibly not far-off grave. minutes of the eternally ended yesterday!

All this hundreds have gone through; so did Hilary. She said afterward it was good for her that she did; it would make her feel for others in a way she had never felt before. Also, because it taught her that such a heartbreak can be borne and lived through when found; and where, when reason fails, and those who, striving to do right irrespective of the consequences, cry out against their torments, and wonder why they should be made so to suffer, childlike faith comes to their rescue. For, let us have all the philosophy at per." our fingers' ends, what are we but children? We know not what a day may bring forth. not their knock. It is-" All wisdom resolves itself into the simple hymn which we learned when we were young:

> "Deep in unfathomable mines Of never-failing skill, He treasures up His vast designs, And works His sovereign will.

"Blind unbelief is sure to err, And scan His work in vain: God is His own interpreter, And He will make it plain."

sole heir and legatee, indeed in' exactly the The night after Robert Lyon left, Hilary · lor. 'Hilary had been writing a long letter to "This will exists still; so that in any case Miss Balquidder, explaining that she would . you are safe. No further poverty can ever now give up in favor of the other young lady, or any other of the many to whom it would His-his own-Robert Lyon's own. Her be a blessing, her position in the shop; but and lip to lip-for a space that seemed half a one who had passed through the waves and life-time of mixed anguish and joy-that he been landed safe ashore, to help those who was not really going; that somehow or other, were still struggling, as she herself had strugnext day or next week he would be back again, gled once. She desired, as far as in her lay, as in his frequent re-appearances, exactly as to be Miss Balquidder's "right hand" til Mr. Lyon came home.

This letter she read aloud to Johanna. in silence. She felt terribly worn and weary,

"Yes, my child."

And Johanna smoothed her hair in the old, handwriting that yesterday would have been she betrayed that secret which would have thrown into the fire, but to-day, is picked up made her sister's life miserable, have blotted and kept as a relic: and at times, bursting out the thirty years of motherly love, and through the quietness which must be gained, caused the other love to rise up like a cloud between her and it, never to be lifted until Jo-

"No, no," she thought to herself, as she looked on that frail, old face, which even the secondary grief of this last week seemed to have made frailer and older. "No, it is better as it is; I believe I did right.

will show."

The end was nearer than she thought. So. help is sought where only real help can be become a less holy thing than it is—Providence accepts the will for the act, and makes the latter needless.

There was a sudden knock at the hall door. "It is the young people coming in to sup-

"It's not," said Hilary, starting up-"it's

She never finished the sentence, for she was solbing in Robert Lyon's arms.

"What does it all mean?" cried the bewildered Johanna, of whom, I must confess, for once nobody took the least notice.

It meant that, by one of these strange accidents, as we call them, which in a moment alter the whole current of things, the senior partner had suddenly died, and his son, not being qualified to take his place in the Laverpool house, had to go out to India instéad of Robert Lyon, who would now remain permanently, as the third senior partner, in Eng- all the winter from the mignonette boxes on

He had gone thence direct to Liverpool, ar-with her great aversion to London, to make ranged affairs so far as was possible, and re-her nursling as far as possible "a country turned, traveling without an hour's intermis-, child." sion, to tell his own tidings, as was best -or as he thought it was.

desire to come suddenly back, as, it is said, if zie," also, "Pa-pa," as had been carefully the absent or the dead should come, they taught him by his conscientious nurse. At would find all things changed; the place filled which papa had been at first excessively surup in home and hearth—no face of welcome prised, then gratified, and had at last taken -no heart leaping to heart in the eestasy of kindly to the appellation as a matter of course.

Well, if Robert Lyon had any misgivings and being a man, and in love, perhaps he had

-they were ended now.

find to say when, Johanna having considerately vanished, he might have talked as much as he pleased.

of inexpressible content.

He lifted up between his bands the sweet face, neither so young nor so pretty as it had been, but oh! so sweet, with the sweetnees that long outlives beauty—a fact that a man might infinitely loving, so infinitely true! And he knew it was his wife's face, to shine upon him day by day, and year by year, till it faded into old age—beautiful and beloved even then. All the strong nature of the man gave way; he wept almost like a child in his "little woman's" arms.

Let us leave them there, by that peaceful fireside— these two, who are to sit by one fireside as long as they live. Of their further ulously changed; people do not change, esfortune we know nothing-nor do they them-pecially at his age: externally he was still the selves--except the one fact, in itself joy enough! for any mortal cup to hold, that it will be shared together. Two at the hearth, two abroad; two to labor, two to rejoice: or, if so it must be, two to weep, and two to comfort one another: the man to be the head of the woman, and the woman the heart of the man. This is the ordination of God; this is the perfect life; none the less perfect that so many fall might be for the rest of his life at least manshort of it.

So let us bid them good-by: Robert Lyon and Hilary Leaf, "Good-by; God be with little as she liked him, she tried to conquer ye!" for we shall see them no more.

CHAPTER XXVII.

pointing out to little Henry how the lilacs and and last, not least, the butler avouched that laburnums were coming into flower in the master hardly ever went to bed "muzzy" now. square below, and speculating with him wheth-Toward all his domestics, and especially his er the tribe of sparrows which they had fed son's nurse, he behaved himself more like a the window sill would be building nests in the This news had met him at Southampton, tall trees of Russell Square: for she wished,

Master Henry Leaf Ascott was by no means little now. He would run about on his totter-Perhaps at the core of his heart lurked the ing fat legs, and he could say, "Mammy Liz-It inaugurated a new era in Peter Ascott's

At first twice a week, and then every day, he sent up for "Master Ascott" to keep him company at dessert; he then changed his "Is she glad to see me?" was all he could dinner hour from half past six to five, because Elizabeth, with her stern sacrifice of every thing to the child's good, had suggested to him, humbly but firmly, that late hours kept Hilary's only answer was a little, low laugh little Henry too long out of his bed. He gave up his bottle of port and his after-dinner sleep, and took to making water-lilies and caterpillars out of oranges and boats out of walnut shells, for his boy's special edification. Sometimes when, at half past six, Elizabeth, punctual as clockwork, knocked at the dining room door, she look on all his life time and never tire of so heard father and son laughing together in a most jovial manner, though the decanters were in their places and the wine glasses untouched.

And even after the child disappeared, the butler declared that master usually took quietly to his newspaper, or rang for his tea, or perhaps dozed harmlessly in his chair till bedtime. I do not allege that Peter Ascott was miracsame pompous, overbearing, coarse man, with whom, no doubt, his son would have a tolerably sore bargain in years to come. But still the child had touched a soft corner in his heart, the one soft corner which in his youth had yielded to the beauty of Miss Selina Leaf: and the old fellow was a better fellow than he had once been. Probably, with care, he ageable.

Elizabeth hoped so for his boy's sake, and her antipathy as much as she could. She at ways took care to treat him with extreme respect, and to bring up little Henry to do the same. And, as often happens, Mr. Ascott began gradually to comport himself in a manner deserving of respect. He ceased his oaths and his ELIZABETH stood at the nursery window, coarse language; seldom flew into a passion: tablishment at Russell Square went on in a Chartist lecturer, or something of the sort, way more peaceful than had ever been known withhis pretty, showy London wife, who, when before.

mistress: he seemed to have had enough of was born. matrimony. Of his late wife he never spoke; now alike ended.

with a sacred sense of duty, occasionally talk-more. ed to little Henry about "mamma up there" -pointing to the blank bit of blue sky over to end. the trees of Russell Square, and hoped in time to make him understand something about her, had been pointing out the lilacs to little Henry, and how she had loved him, her "baby." and now came in from the square with a This love, the only beautiful emotion her life branch of them in her hand, the postman gave had known, was the one fragment that remain-ther a letter, the handwriting of which made ed of it after her death: the one remembrance her start as if it had been a visitation from the she left to her child.

that she bore with equanimity the parting out and read the few lines, which, though with her dear Miss Hilary, who went away in glory and happiness as Mrs. Robert Lyon, to one blot, were so like—yet so terribly unlike live in Liverpool and Miss Lore with the parting out and read the few lines, which, though written on shabby paper, and with more than one blot, were so like—yet so terribly unlike live in Liverpool and Miss Lore with the parting out and read the few lines, which, though written on shabby paper, and with more than one blot, were so like—yet so terribly unlike live in Liverpool, and Miss Leaf with her. -Tom's caligraphy of old: Thus both Elizabeth's youthful dreams ended in nothing, and it was more than probable of you: but if you would like to see an old friend alive, I that for the future their lives and hers being so widely apart, she would see very little of of you: for I'm as poor as a rat; and once lately I saw you, her beloved mistresses any more. But they looking so well and well-to-do. But it was the same kind old face, and I should like to get one kind look from it behad done their work in her and for her: and fore I go where I shain't want any kindness from any body. it had borne fruit a hundred fold, and would However, do just as you choose. "Yours affectionately,

"I know you will take care of this childhe is the hope of the family," said Miss Leaf, when she was giving her last kiss to little Henry. "I could not bear to leave him, if I were not leaving him with you."

And Elizabeth had taken her charge proudly in her arms, knowing she was trusted, and inwardly vowing to be worthy of that trust, girl, looking forward as girls do to wifehood love. and motherhood; or whether she teel not been always the staid middle aged person she may have died a natural death: many first was now, whom nobody ever suspected of any loves do: a riper, completer, happier love may such things.

settle her mother comfortably upon a weekly likewise, who can ever quite forget it-the allowance, to 'prentice her little brother, to lew of their youth-the beauty of their dawn. see one sister married, and the other sent off "Poor Tom, poor Tom!" sighed Elizabeth, to Liverpool, to be servant to Mrs. Lyon. "my own poor Tom!" While at Stowbury, she had heard by chance She forgot Esther; either from Tom's not master and less like a tyrant; so that the estlot Tom Cliffe's passing through the town as a he brought her there, had looked down rather There was no talk of his giving it a new contemptuously upon the street where Tom

This was all Elizabeth knew about them. whether he loved her or not, whether he had They, too, had passed from her life as phases regretted her or not, the love and regret were of keen joy and keener sorrow do pass, like a dream and the shadows of a dream. It may Poor Selina! It was Elizabeth only, who, be, life itself will seem at the end to be nothing

But Elizabeth Hand's love story was not so Little Henry was not in the least like her, nor yet like his father. He took after some forgotten type, some past generation of either family, which reappeared in this as something new. To Elizabeth he was a perfect revelation of beauty and intantile fascination. He filled up every corner of her heart. She grew fat and flourishing, even cheerful: so cheerful that she here with covariant the parties out and read the few lines, which, though "Mammy Lizzie, mammy Lizzie!" cried had done their work in her and for her: and fore I go where I shain't want any kindness from any body.

"Underneath is my address."

It was in one of those wretched nooks in Westminster, now swept away by Victoria Street and other improvements. happened to have read about it in one of the many charitable pamplilets, reports, etc., which were sent continually to the wealthy Mr. Ascott, and which he sent down stairs to light tires with. What must not poor Tom Another dream was likewise ended; so com- have sunk to before he had come to live there? pletely that she sometimes wondered if it was His letter was like a cry out of the depths, ever real, whether she had ever been a happy and the voice was that of her youth, her first is any women ever deaf to that? The love have come in its place; but there must be some-She had been once back to her old home, to thing unnatural about the woman and man times which his letter produced; forgother for knows who's to bury him." the time being as completely as if she had nev- With that sentence knelling in her ears, Elier existed. Even when the recollection came zabeth waited till she heard the short cough it made little difference. the dislike and contempt had all calmed down; heavily up the stair. she thought she could now see Tom's wife as Tom, Tom himself. But oh, so altered! any other woman. Especially if, as the let- with every bit of youth gone out of him; with ter indicated, they were so very poor and mis-death written on every line of his haggard erable.

Possibly Eether had suggested writing it? with a sentimental pleasure, but which now Perhaps, though Tom did not, Esther did had come upon him in all its ghastly reality. "want to get something out of her"-Elizabeth Hand, who was known to have large The disease was latent in his family, Elizabeth wages, and to be altogether a thriving person? knew: she had known it when she belonged Well, it mattered little. The one fact remain- to him, and fondly thought that, as his wife, ed: Tom was in distress; Tom needed her; she must go.

Her only leisure time was of an evening fredul voice. after Henry was in bed. The intervening hours, especially the last one, when the child was down stairs with his father, calmed her: subdued the tumult of old remembrances that came surging up and beating at the long shut leaping and laughing, and playing all sorts of in the sad many times always absorbed tricks as she put him to bed, she could smile in the sad present; they seldon trouble themthrough the prayer she had thought it right heart of Elizabeth. to begin to teach him, though of course he "I'm year had was too young to understand it—the words it shakes me dreadfully; especially of nights." "Thy will be done;" "Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us;" and lastly, "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil," struck hame to his nurse's inmost soul. "Mammy, mammy Lizzie's 'tying."

Yes, she was crying, but it did her good. like a top in five minutes: then she took off her good silk gown, and dressed herself; soberly and decently, but so that people should not suspect, in that low and dangerous neighborhood, the sovereigns that she carried in au under pocket, ready to use as occasion requir-Thus equipped, without a minute's delay, she started for Tom's lodging.

It was poorer than even she expected. One attic room, bare almost as when it was built, ery thing till I fell ill, and then she met a fel-No chimney or grate, no furniture except a low with lots of money. Curse her!" box which served as both table and chair; and a heap of straw, with a blanket thrown over all over, and sent him into another violent fit clean: Tom's innate sense of refinement had grees, but in a state of such complete exhausabided with him to the last.

vations, for Tom was out-gone, the landlady like a child. said, to the druggist's shop, round the corner.

man, civilly, probably led thereto by Eliza-came into the room. beth's respectable appearance, and the cab in "Lie down, Tom, and keep yourself quiet mentioning her, or in the strong return to old minute's time. "Can't last long, and Lord

The sharp jealousy, and the hard breathing of some one toiling

face, the death he had once prognosticated

He was in the last stage of consumption. her incessant care might save him from it; but nothing could save him now.

"Who's that?" said he, in his own sharp,

"Me, Tom. But don't speak.

till your cough's over." Tom grasped her hand as she stood by him, but he made no further demonstration, nor used any expression of gratitude. He seemed selves much about the past. Only there was too. And when kneeling beside her in his something in the way Tom clung to her hand, pretty white night gown, he stammered helplessly, imploringly, that moved the inmost

"I'm very bad, you see. This cough; oh,

"Have you any doctor?"

"The druggist close by, or rather, the druggist's shopman. He's a very kind young fellow, from our county, I fancy, for he asked me once if I wasn't a Stowbury man; and ever since he has doctored me for nothing, and given me a shilling too, now and then, when fore. Have you actually wanted food?" "Yes, many a time. I've been out of work this twelvemonth." "But Esther?"

"Who?" screamed Tom.

"Your wife?"

"My wife? I've got none? She spent ev-

The fury with which he spoke shook him The only comfort about it was that it was of coughing, out of which he revived by detion that Elizabeth hazarded no more ques-Elizabeth had time to make all these obser-tions. He must evidently be dealt with exactly

She made up her mind in her own silent, "He's very bad, ma'am," added the wo- way, as indeed she had done ever since she which she had come—lest she should lose a for a little. I'll be back as soon as I can—back with something to do you good. You|night, when I've lain on that straw, and won't object."

You always could."

Elizabeth groped her way down stairs better." strangely calm and self-possessed. There was need. Tom, dying, had come to her as his For, as she was washing up the tea things, sole support and consolation—throwing him-she had noticed Tom's voice grow feebler, and self helplessly upon her, never doubting either his features sharper and more wan. her will or her power to help him. Neither "I'm very tired," he said. "I'm afraid to must fail. The inexplicable woman's strength, go to bed, I get such wretched nights; but I sometimes found in the very gentlest, quietest, think, if I lay down in my clothes, I could go and apparently the weakest character, nerved to sleep." her now.

looking for lodgings, till the evening darkened, had been a child. and the Abbey towers rose grimly against the "You're very good to me," he said, and summer sky. Then she crossed over West-looked up at her—Tom's bright, fond look of minster Bridge, and in a little street on the years ago. But it passed away in a moment, Surrey side she found what she wanted—a and he closed his eyes, saying he was so terdecent room, half sitting, half bedroom, with ribly tired. what looked like a decent landlady. There was no time to make many inquiries; any have been at home by now. You'll take care any thing was better than to leave Tom an of yourself, Tom, and I'll come and see you other night where he was.

firing and provisions; every thing she could You know where?" think of to make him comfortable; and then she went to fetch him in a cab.

The sick man offered no resistance; indeed, he hardly seemed to know what she was doing with him. She discovered the cause of this voice. half insensibility when, in making a bundle of his few clothes, she found a package labeled

"Don't take it from me," he said pitifully,

"it's the only comfort I have."

But when he found himself in the cheerful husband. room, with the fire blazing and the tea laid out, he woke up like a person out of a bad dream.

"Oh, Elizabeth, I'm so comfortable!"

Elizabeth could have wept.

vived him, or whether it was one of the sud whom she had been so fond, so proud; whose den flashes of life that often occur in consump-future she had joyfully anticipated long before tive patients, but he seemed really better, and she thought of herself as mixed up with it; began to talk, telling Elizabeth about his and he was dying, dying at four-and-twenty; long illness, and saying over again how very passing away to the other world, where, perkind the druggist's young man had been to haps, she might meet him yet, with no cruel

"I'm sure he's a gentleman, though he has come down in the world; for, as he says, 'mis-"Tom, I didn't mean to vex you. I'll try to ery makes a man acquainted with strange be as good as a sister to you. I'll never forbedfellows, and takes the nonsense out of him.' sake you as long as you live." I think so too, and if ever I get better, I don't mean to go about the country speaking against "Good-by, then, for to-night."

born gentlefolks any more. They're much a muchness with ourselves—bad and good a faietly and tenderly. She was so glad of it little of all sorts; the same flesh and blood as afterward.

we are. Aren't they, Elizabeth?"

It was late enough when she reached Russian.

"I suppose so."

"And there's another thing I mean to do. proceedings of Mrs. Hand, who was a privileg-I mean to try and be good like you. Many a ed person. She crept in beside her little Hen-thought I was dying, I've remembered you "No, no; you can do any thing you like and all the things you used to say to me. You are a good woman; there never was a

Elizabeth smiled, a faint, rather sad smile.

Elizabeth helped him to the small pallet, She went up and down, street after street, shook his pillow, and covered him up as if he

"Then I'll bid you good-by, for I ought to again the very first hour I can be spared. She paid a week's rent in advance; bought And if you want me you'll send to me at once?

"I will," said Tom. "Its the same house, isn't it, in Russell Square?"

"Yes." And they were both silent. After a minute, Tom asked, in a troubled

"Have you forgiven me?"

"Yes, Tom, quite."

"Won't you give me one kiss, Elizabeth?" She turned away. She did not mean to be hard, but somehow she could not kiss Esther's

"Ah, well; it's all the same! good-by!"

"Good-by, Tom."

But as she stood at the door, and looked back at him lying with his eyes shut, and as white as if he were dead, Elizabeth's heart Whether the wholesome food and drink re-melted. He was her Tom, her own Tom, of Esther between.

"Tom," she said, and knelt beside him,

"I know you never will."

sell Square; but nobody ever questioned the put his arms about her neck, she clasped him is certainly a claim. I always feel bound, tight, and thought there was still something somewhat as a member of Parliament might

to live for in this weary world.

All night she thought over what best could native town. So be satisfied, Mrs. Hand; be done for Tom. Though she never deceived consider the thing settled." herself for a moment as to his state, still she—And he was going away; but time being of thought, with care and proper nursing, he such great moment. Elizabeth ventured to demight live a few months. Especially if she tain him till he had written the letter of recould get him into the Consumption Hospital, commendation, and found out what days the newly started in Chelsea, of which she was application for admission could be received. aware Mr. Ascott—who dearly loved to see his He did it very patiently, and even took out his name in a charity list—was one of the gov- purse and laid a sovereign on the top of the ernors.

ed to speak to her master at once.

The time she chose was when she brought down little Henry, who was now always ex-Elizabeth, putting it gently aside. She could pected to appear, and say, "Dood morning, not bear that Tom should accept any body's papa," before Mr. Ascott went into the city. money but her own.

ther's face, and the father beaming all over long letter explaining what she had done, and with delight, the bitter, almost fierce thought, appointing the next day but one, the earliest smote Elizabeth, Why should Peter Ascott be possible, for taking him out to Chelsea herstanding there fat and flourishing, and poor self. If he objected, to the plan, he was to Tom dying? It made her bold to ask the write and say so; but she urged him as strongonly favor she ever had asked of the master ly as she could not to let slip this opportunity whom she did not care for, and to whom she of obtaining good nursing and first rate medihad done her duty simply as duty, without cal care. until lately, one fragment of respect.

a minute before you go out?"

Master Henry? Or perhaps yourself? You across her with a sudden pang. His face, want more wages? Very well. I shall be feebly lifted up from the pillow, with its last glad, in any reasonable way, to show my sat-affectionate smile, the sound of his cough as isfaction at the manner in which you bring up she stood listening outside on the stair head, my son."

"But it is not that,"

she explained what it was.

with a silent hand, and he dearly liked to cresof him—as indeed he bade fair to be spoiled ate difficulties, if only to show how he could by the whole establishment at Russell Square smooth them down.

tion Hospital, is, you should be aware, no easy a minute's breathing space on Westminster matter, until the building at Queen's Elm is Bridge, and watched the great current of Loncomplete. But I flatter myself I have influ-don life ebbing and flowing--life on the river ence. I have subscribed a deal of money, and life on the shore; every body so busy and Possibly the person may be got in in time. active and bright. Who did you say he was?"

"Thomas Cliffe.

servants here, Esther—"

housekeeper?"

pect an answer, and Elizabeth gave none. She ing. There were also one or two policemen, could not bear to make public Tom's misery who were ordering the little crowd to give way and Esther's shame.

ry, and as the child turned in his sleep and "And you say he is a Stowbury man? That be, to do my best for any one belonging to my

There was no time to be lost; she determin- "I suppose the man is poor; you can use this for his benefit."

"There is no need, thank you, Sir," said

As they stood, the boy laughing in his fa- At her first spare moment she wrote him a

Many times during the day the thought of "Sir, if you please, might I speak with you Tom alone in his one room-comfortable though it was, and though she had begged the "Certainly, Mrs. Hand. Any thing about landlady to see that he wanted nothing-came haunted her all through that sunshiny June "Thank you, Sir," said Elizabeth, courtsey-day: and, mingled with it, came ghostly visions of that other day in June—her happy And in the briefest language she could find Whitsun holidav—her first and her last.

No letter coming from Tom on the appoint-Mr. Ascott knitted his brows and looked ed morning, she left Master Henry in the He never scattered his benefits charge of the house-maid, who was very fond —and went down to Westminster.

"To get a patient admitted at the Consump- There was a long day before her, so she took

"Poor Tom, poor Tom!" she sighed, and He married one of the wondered whether his ruined life would ever come to any happy ending, except death.

"Oh, don't trouble yourself about the name. She hurried on, and soon found the street I shouldn't recollect it. The housekeeper in our she had taken his lodging. At the cormight. Why didn't his wife apply to the ner of it was, as is too usual in London streets, housekeeper and the ner of it was, as is too usual in London streets, a public house, about which more than the The careless question seemed hardly to ex-usual number of disreputable idlers were hangto a group of twelve men, coming out.

"What is that?" asked Elizabeth.

the body."

with any thing of the sort, stood aside with a gratified at having done their duty to their sense of awe, to let the little procession pass, country. and then followed up the street.

It stopped; oh no! not at that door! But body hindered or followed her; nobody cared it was; there was no mistaking the number, any thing for the solitary dead. nor the drawn-down blind in the upper room—

Tom's room.

that made the policeman stare.

of consumption; verdict will probably be, dead," English law exacts.

'Died by the visitation of God!"

Whether he had died so solemn recognition of our national religious through the long hours of darkness, or of dayfeeling, was true. God had "visited" poor light following, alive and conscious perhaps, Tom: he suffered no more.

the other, less noisily, and some of them look-known. ing grave. Nobody took any notice of her, young woman as saw him last alive. She'll weep. give her evidence. She'll teli you I'm not a bit to blame."

dy burst into a torrent of explanation: how every thing, and loved him to the end. she had done her very best for the poor fellow; how she listened at his door several times during the first day, and heard him cough, that is, she thought she had, but toward night all was so very quiet; and there having come a letter by post, she thought she would take it now, and as cold as a stone."

ed, with a large beard. He pushed aside the otherwise have fallen on the parish. landlady and Elizabeth, till he saw the latter's eager to hear any thing he could say.

of, had been his patient for some months, and yard. was in the last stage of consumption. He had no doubt the death had ensued from perfectly laid in his coffin, and covered up forever from natural causes, as he explained in such tech- mortal eyes. Then, and not till then, she sat nical language as completely to overpower the herself down beside him and wept. jury, and satisfy them accordingly. They Nobody contested with her the possessson house, where, after a brief consultation, they which were scarcely more than the clothes he delivered their verdict, as the astute policeman "Coroner's inquest; jury proceeding to view had foretold, "Died by the visitation of God;" took pipes and brandy all round at the bar, Elizabeth, who had never come into contact and then adjourned to their several homes,

Meantime, Elizabeth crept up stairs. No-

There he lay-poor Tom! almost as she had left him; the counterpane was hardly disturb-"Who is dead?" she asked, in a whisper ed, the candle she had placed on the chair had burned down to a bit of wick, which still lay "Oh! nobody particular; a young man, in the socket. Nobody had touched him, or found dead in his bed; supposed to be a case any thing about him, as, in all cases of "Found

Whether he had died soon after she quitted Ay, that familiar phrase, our English law's him that night, or whether he had lingered yet too weak to call any one, even had there Elizabeth leaned against the door-way, and been any one he cared to call—when, or how, saw the twelve jurymen go up stairs with a the spirit had passed away unto Him who clatter of feet, and come down again, one after gave it, were mysteries that could never be

But it was all over now; he lay at rest with until the lodging house mistress appeared. the death smile on his face. Elizabeth, as she "Oh, here she is, gentlemen. This is the stood and looked at him, could not, dared not the death smile on his face. Elizabeth, as she

"My poor Tom, my own dear Tom," was all she thought, and knew that he was all her And pulling Elizabeth after her, the landla-lown now; that she had loved him through

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Elizabeth spent the greatest part of her holiday in that house, in that room. Nobody "And I went in, gentlemen, and I declare, interfered with her; nobody asked in what reupon my oath, I found him lying just as he is lation she stood to the deceased, or what right she had to take upon herself the arrangements "Let me pass; I'm a doctor," said somebo-for his funeral. Every body was only too glad dy behind: a young man, very shabbily dress-to let her assume a responsibility which would

The only person who appeared to remember either her or the dead man was the druggist's "Give that young woman a chair and a assistant, who sent in the necessary medical glass of water, will you?" he called out; and certificate as to the cause of death. Elizabeth his authoritative manner impressed the jury-took it to the Registrar, and thence proceeded men, who gathered around him, ready and to an undertaker hard by, with whom she arranged all about the funeral, and that it He gave his name as John Smith, druggist's should took place in the new cemetery at assistant; said that the young man who lodged Kensal Green. She thought she should like up stairs, whose death he had only just heard that better than a close, noisy London church

Before she left the house she saw poor Tom

quitted the parlor, and proceeded to the public of the few things that had belonged to him, had on when he died; so she made them up and his generally depressed air, giving the efinto a parcel and took them away with her. fect of one who had gone down in the world, In his waistcoat pocket she found one book, made him, even without the misleading "John a little Testament, which she had given him Smith," most unlikely to be identified with It looked as if tt had been a good the Ascott Leaf of old. deal read. If all his studies, all his worship of "pure intellect," as the one supreme good, said Elizabeth truthfully, when her astonishhad ended in that, it was a blessed ending.

once to her master, returned him his letter of be!" recommendation, and explained to him that his kindness was not needed now.

quired from her a few particulars, and again and I believe I may trust you. You would took out his purse, his one panacea for all not betray me, if only for the sake of that poor mortal woes. But Elizabeth declined; she tellow yonder?" said she would only ask him for an advance of her next half-year's wages. She preferred burying her old friend herself.

She buried him, herself the only mourner, on a bright summer's day, with the sun shi-arms upon the back of the bench, and his hand ning dazzlingly on the white grave stones in hiding his eyes, the poor prodigal listened in Kensal Green. The clergyman appeared, read silence to every thing Elizabeth told him; of the service, and went away again. A few min-his Aunt Selina's marriage and death, and of utes ended it all. his men had also departed, she sat down on a Liverpool. bench near to watch the sexton filling up the grave—Tom's grave. She was very quiet, and at length; "they seem to have begun to prosnone but a closely observant person watching per ever since they got rid of me. Well, I'm her face could have penetrated into the truth glad of it. I only wanted to hear of them from of what your impulsive characters, always in you. I shall never trouble them any more. the extremes of mirth or misery, never under-You'll keep my secret, I know. And now I stand about quiet people, that "still waters must go, for I have not a minute more to run deep."

While she sat there some one came past at the inquest, and given the satisfactory evi-his aunt's old servant. But Elizabeth detaindence which had prevented the necessity of her ed him.

giving hers.

a respectable courtesy; for under his thread-fulness that touched the heart of the poor, bare clothes was the bearing of a gentleman, shabby man, "I hope you'll pardon the liberty and he had been so kind to Tom.

over. I meant to have attended it, and seen would trust me, if you would let me be of use to the last of the poor fellow."

"Thank you, Sir," replied Elizabeth, grate-so good to him there."

fully.

her earnestly for a minute or two, and then able to doctor him and help him a little. exclaimed, with a complete change of voice Heigh-ho; it's a comfort to think I ever did and manner,

"Elizabeth, don't you know me? What has become of my aunt Johanna?"

It was Ascott Leaf.

But no wonder Elizabeth had not recogni-now. His close cropped hair, his large heard hiding half his face, and a pair of spec-If I had known you were acquainted with him tacles which he had assumed, were a sufficient I should have been afraid to go near him; but disguise. Besides, the great change from his I felt sure, though he came from Stowbury, he former "dandy" appearance to the extreme of did not guess who I was; he only knew me as shabbiness: his clothes being evidently worn Mr. Smith; and he never once mentioned you. as long as they could possibly hold together, [Was he your cousin, or what?"

"I never should have known you, Sir!" ment had a little subsided; "but I am very glad When she reached home Elizabeth went at to see you. Oh how thankful your aunts will "Do you think so? I thought it was quite the contrary. But it does not matter; they Mr. Ascott seemed a good deal shocked, in-will never hear of me unless you tell them-

"No, Sir."

"Now, tell me something about my aunts, especially my aunt Johanna."

And sitting down in the sunshine, with his When the undertaker and Mr. Lyon's return, and of the happy home at

"They are all quite happy, then?" said he, spare. Good-by, Elizabeth."

With a humility and friendliness, strange her, and turned round. It was the shabby-lenough in Ascott Leaf, he held out his hand looking chemist's assistant, who had appeared | —empty, for he had nothing to give now—to

"Don't go, Sir, please, don't: not just yet." Elizabeth rose and acknowledged him with And then she added, with an earnest respectd he had been so kind to Tom. I take. I'm only a servant, but I knew you "I am too late," he said; "the funeral is when you were a boy, Mr. Leaf: and if you you in any way—if only because you were so

"Poor Tom Cliffe; he was not a bad fel-The young man stood before her, looking at low; he liked me rather, I think; and I was any good to any body."

Ascott sighed, drew his rusty coat sleeves across his eyes, and sat contemplating his boots, which were any thing but dandy boots

"Elizabeth, what relation was Tom to you?

"I was once going to be married to him, ready began to feel that it was so. but he saw somebody he liked better, and married her."

"Poor girl; poor Elizabeth?"

change in Ascott more than the tone in which the chap at Stowbury. Poor old Stowbury! I he uttered these words; a tone of entire res-often think of the place in a way that's perpect and kindly pity, from which he never fectly ridiculous. Still, if any thing happened once departed during that conversation, and to me, I should like my aunts to know it, and many, many others, so long as their confiden-that I didn't forget them." dential relations lasted.

"Now, Sir, would you be so kind as to tell you never mean to go near your aunts again?"

utterly forlorn. have thought he was, the safe wilderness of Road." There, carefully disguised, he had lived decently while his money lasted, and and been taken as assistant by the not over to Uncle Ascott of Russell Square." scrupulous chemist and druggist in that not "But, said Elizabeth, after a pause, "you with a salary of twenty pounds a year.

"And I actually live upon it!" added he, education, position, and name?" with a bitter smile. "I can't run into debt; for who would trust me? And I dress in rags "how dare I ever resume my own name and almost, as you see. And I get my meals how get back my rightful position while Peter Asand where I can; and I sleep under the shop cott lives? Can you or any body point out a counter. A pretty life for Mr. Ascott Leaf, way?" isn't it now? What would my aunts say if they knew it?"

heaved visibly under the close buttoned, thread that would soon grow smoothly green.

body else miserable."

Ay, that wonderful teacher, Adversity,

"Which, like the toad, ugly and venomous, Wears yet a precious jewel in its head,"

had left behind this jewel in the young man's I've turned over scheme after scheme, but I heart. A disguised, beggared outcast, he had never once thought of any thing so simple as found out the value of an honest name; forsa-that. Bravo, Elizabeth! You're a remarkable ken, unfriended, he had learned the precious-woman." ness of home and love; made a servant of, tyrannized over, and held in low esteem, he had felt glad. Any thing that she could possibly been taught by hard experience the secret of do for any creature belonging to her dear mistrue humility and charity—the esteeming of tresses seemed to this faithful servant the natothers better than himself.

Not with all ratures does misfortune so work, but it did with his. He had sinned; he temperament no trouble could repress, had

Elizabeth considered a moment, and then had paid the cost of his sin in bitter suffering; told the simple fact; it could not matter now. but the result was cheaply bought, and he al-

"Yes," said he, in answer to a question of Elizabeth's, "I really am, for some things, happier than I used to be. I feel more like Perhaps nothing could have shown the great what I was in the old days, when I was a lit-

"But, Sir," asked Elizabeth earnestly, "do me something about yourself? I'll not repeat "I can't say; it all depends upon circumany thing to your annts, if you don't wish it." stances. I suppose," he added, "if, as is said, Ascott yielded. He had been so long, so one's sin is sure to find one out, the same rule He sat down beside Eliza-goes by contraries. It seems poor Cliffe once beth, and then, with eyes often averted, and spoke of me to a district visitor, the only viswith many breaks between, which she had to itor he ever had; and this gentleman, hearing fill up as best as she could, he told her all his of the inquest, came yesterday to inquire about story, even to the sad secret of all, which had him of me; and the end was that he offered caused him to run away from home, and hide me a situation with a person he knew, a very himself in the last place where they would respectable chemist in Tottenham Court

"And shall you go?"

"To be sure. I've learned to be thankful then, driven step by step to the brink of des for small mercies. Nobody will find me out titution, he had offered himself for employ- or recognize me. You didn't. Who knows? ment in the lowest grade of his own profession, I may even have the honor of dispensing drugs too respectable neighborhood of Westminster, will not always remain as John Smith, druggist's shopman, throwing away all your good

"Elizabeth," said he, in a humbled tone,

She thought the question over in her clear head; clear still, even at this hour, when she "They would say that it was an honest life, had to think for others, though all personal and that they were not a bit ashamed of you." feeling and interest were buried in that grave Ascott drew himself up a little, and his chest over which the sexton was now laying the turf

"If I might advise, Mr. Leaf, I should say, "Well, at least, it is a life that makes no save up all your money, and then go, just as you are, with an honest, bold front, right into my master's house, with the fifty pounds in your hand-"

> "By Jove, you've hit it!" cried Ascott, starting up. "What a thing a woman's head is!

She smiled—a very sad smile—but still she ural and bounden duty of her life.

Long after the young man, whose mercurial

address where she could always find him, and ticular business. give him regular news of his aunts, though he made her promise to give them, as yet, no ti- "He says you wouldn't know it, Sir." dings in return, Elizabeth sat still, watching "Show him in, then. Probably a case of the sun decline and the shadows lengthen over charity, as usual. Oh!" the field of graves. In the calmness and beau- And Mr. Ascott's opinion was confirmed by ty of this solitary place an equal calm seemed the appearance of the shabby young man with to come over her; a sense of how wonderfully the long beard, whom Elizabeth did not wonevents had linked themselves together and der he never recognized in the least worked themselves out; how even poor Tom's She ought to have retired, and yet she could mournful death had brought about this meet not. She hid herself partly behind the door, ing, which might end in restoring to her be-afraid of passing Ascott; dreading alike to loved mistresses their lost sheep, their outcast, wound him by recognition or non-recognition. miserable boy. She did not reason the matter But he took no notice. He seemed excessiveout, but she felt it, and felt that in making her ly agitated. in some degree His instrument God had been very good to her in the midst of her desola- Wants'a situation, as hundreds do, and think put aside her own troubles for the trouble of besides. But it's no good, I tell you, Sir; I somebody else. Almost immediately after never give nothing to strangers, except-Here, Tom Cliffe's death her little Henry fell ill Henry, my son, take that person there this with scarlatina and remained for many months half crown." in a state of health so fragile as to engross all. And the little boy, in his pretty purple velher thought and care. It was with difficulty vet frock and his prettier face, trotted across that she contrived a few times to go for Hen- the room and put the money into poor Ascott's ry's medicines to the shop where "John hand. He took it; and then to the astonish-Smith" served.

ier, brighter, freer from that aspect of broken-and kissed him. down respectability which had touched her so "Young man, young fellow—" much. He did not dress any better, but still "I see you don't know me, Mr. Ascott, and "the gentleman" in him could never be hid-lit's not surprising. But I have come to repay pleasant novelty. "I have some time to myself also. Shop Good Good "-the sole expletive Peter Asshuts at nine, and I get up at 5 A. M.—bless cott had been heard to use for long. "Ascott us! what would my Aunt Hilary say? And Leaf, is that you? I thought you were in it's not for nothing. There are more ways Australia, or dead, or something." and so on, I did em:"

It cheered Elizabeth for a long estly earned." laugh of old.

some time longer.

It was on a snowy February day, when throat. having brought the could home quite strong. "Mrs. Hand, you had better take Master and received unlimited gratitude and guineas Henry up stairs." contentedly to bed.

The footman knocked at the door.

gone away in excellent spirits, leaving her an young man wanting to speak to master on par-

"Let him send in his name."

"Come a begging, young man, I suppose? that I have half the clerkships in the city at It seemed Elizabeth's lot always to have to my disposal, and that I am made of money

ment of Master Henry, and the still greater She noticed that every time he looked health- astonishment of his father, lifted up the child

"Young man, young fellow-"

den or lost, and he said his master treated him you this—" he laid a fifty pound note down on "like a gentleman," which was apparently a the table. "Also, to thank you earnestly for not prosecuting me, and to say—"

than one of turning an honest penny, when a "No, I'm alive and here, more's the pity young fellow really sets about it. Elizabeth, perhaps. Except that I have lived to pay you you used to be a literary character yourself; back what I cheated you out of. What you look into the and the ," (naming two generously gave me I can't pay, though I may popular magazines), and if you find a series of sometime. Meantime, I have brought you especially clever papers on sanitary reform, this. It's honestly earned. Yes," observing the keen doubtful look, "though I have hard-He slapped his chest with Ascott's merry ly a coat to my back, I assure you it's hon-

Mr. Ascott made no reply. He stooped By and by she had to take little Henry to over the bank-note, examined it, folded it, and Brighton, and lost sight of "John Smith" for put it into his pocket-book; then, after another puzzled investigation of Ascott, cleared his from the delighted father, Master Henry's! An hour after, when little Henry had long faithful nurse stood in her usual place at the been sound asleep, and she was sitting at her dining-room door, waiting for the intermina-usual evening sewing in her solitary nursery, ble grace of "only five minutes more" to be Elizabeth learned that the "shabby young over, and her boy carried ignominiously but man" was still in the dining-room with Mr. Ascott, who had rung for tea, and some cold "A meat with it. And the footman stated, with undisgaised amazement, that the shabby young was gone to bed, she stood at the nursery winman was actually sitting at the same table dow, looking down upon the trees of the with master!

tongue. Now, as ever, she always kept the light as it was once, more than three years secrets of the family.

dining room.

but with a certain kindly good-humor lighten-at No. 15; the Sunday nights when she and ing up his heavy face. looking condescendingly: Tom Cliffe used to go wandering round and around him, and occasionally rubbing his round the square. hands slowly together, as if he were exceedingly well pleased with himself. There stood of A-cost Leat, and how happy he had looked, Ascott Leaf, looking bright and handsome, in and how happy his aunts would be to-morrow. spite of his shabbiness, and quite at his case "Well, Tom would be glad too, if he knew --which small peculiarity was never likely to all. te knocked out of him under the most depressin≢ circumstances.

He shook hands with Etizabeth warmly.

"I wanted to ask you if you have any mes- white and peaceful, out at Kensal Green, suge for Liverpool. I go there to morrow on I issuess for Mr. Ascott, and afterward I shall probably go and see my annte." He faltered Enzabeth. Any special message, eh?"

ter which, as quickly as she could, she slipped "Mammy Lizzie."

out of the dining-room.

Bit, long, long after, when all the houselany body but I om.

isquare, that stretched their motionless arms Elizabeth smiled to herself and held her up into the moonlight sky-just such a moonago, the night little Henry was born. About ten o'clock she was summoned to the she recalled all the past, from the day when Miss Hilary hung up her bonnet for her in There stood Peter A-cott, pompous as ever, the house-place at Stowbury; the dreary life

"Poor Tom." said she to herself, thinking

But, happy as every body was, there was nothing so close to Elizabeth's heart as the one grave over which the snow was now lying,

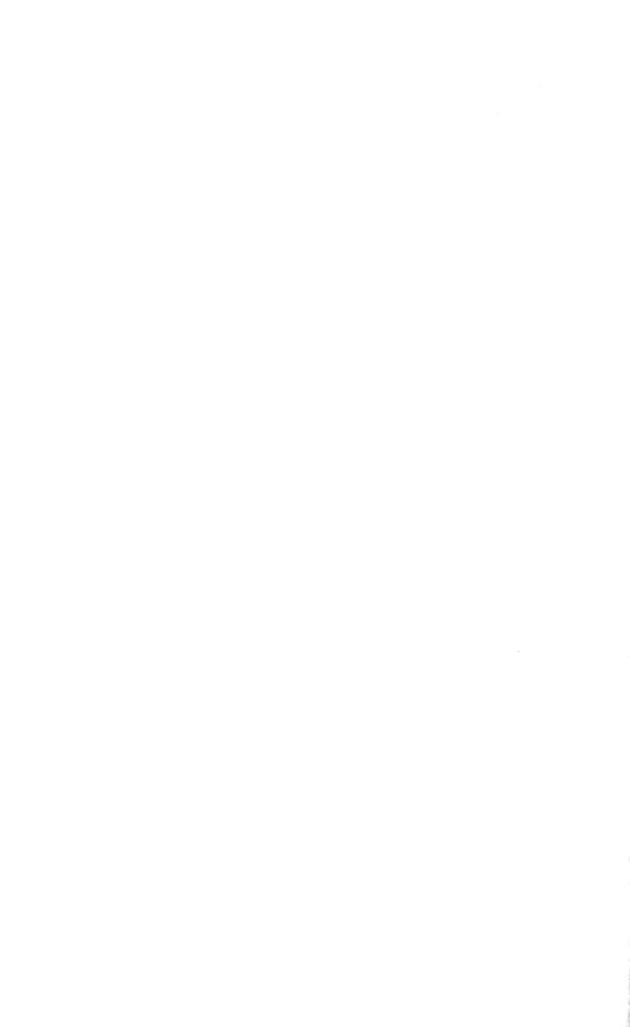

Elizabeth is still living—which is a great a moment, but quickly shook the emotion off. blessing, for nobody could well do without her. "Of course, I shall tell them all about you, She will probably attain a good old age; being healthy and strong, very equable in temper "Only my duty, Sir, and Master Henry is now, and very cheerful too, in her quiet way. quite well again." said Elizabeth, formally, Doubtless, she will yet have Master Henry sa and dropping her old-fashioned courtesy; at children climbing her knees, and calling her

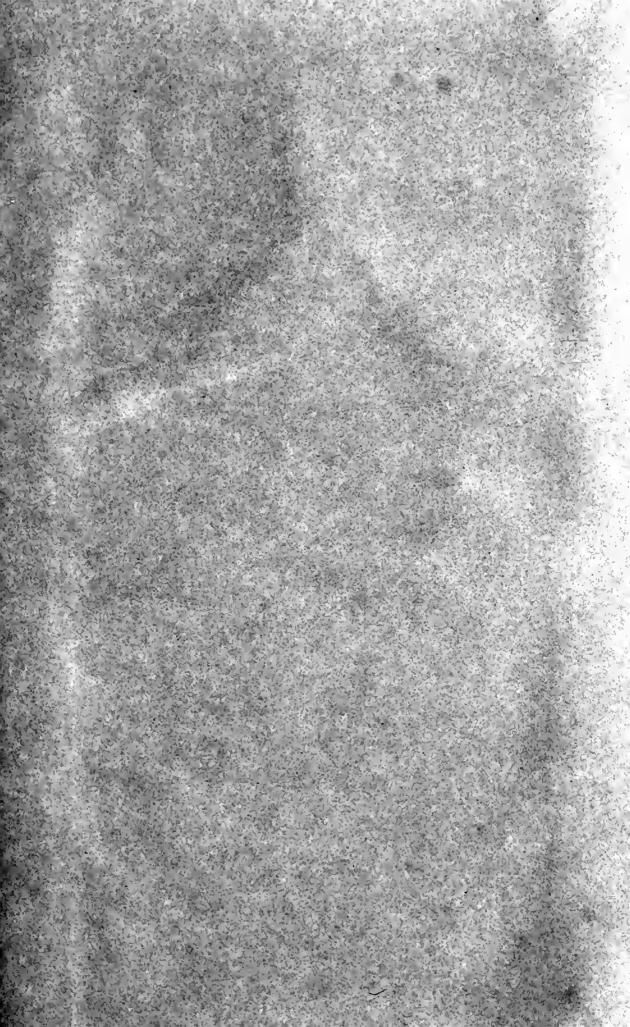

But she will never marry—She never loved

THE END.

RARE BOOK COLLECTION

THE LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA AT CHAPEL HILL

Wilmer 289

